Selected Tools & Curricula Designed & Disseminated

Healthy Sisters and Healthy Brothers: Project Monitor and Senior Research Associate for collaborative work with the CDC, community representatives, African American scholars and leaders, and healthy sexuality experts to develop two interventions grounded in African American culture and focused to African American men and women on HBCU campuses for development and sustaining of healthy-relationships. The Healthy Sisters and Brothers Workshops are intended to increase HIV and STI prevention awareness and behaviors among young African American women and men (ages 18-24), and ultimately to promote healthy relationships. These Workshops are designed not only to educate participants, but also engage them in discussions of issues that influence the development of healthy relationships and the decisions that affect their sexual health. The curricula were piloted at three HBCUs and finalized from the results of the pilots. With the utilization of the curricula it is anticipated that benefits will include a reduction in STIs and a reduction of intimate partner violence. The process and results of this work have been reported at: The American Public Health Association meeting (2013); the American Evaluation Association (2013), and the National STD Conference (2014). Information about the curricula was included in several RWJF SWW national and regional briefings. The curricula are available through the National Network of Prevention Training Centers at: <http://nnptc.org/resources/healthy-sisters-brothers/> This CDC-funded national training organization will promote the use of the curricula nationally and is their permanent home. Both curricula are currently being utilized at a number of Historically Black Colleges and Universities.

Library Engagement Assessment Process (LEAP): Project Monitor for the development of the Library Engagement Assessment Process which was designed for the California State Library to move library systems through a process of data collection and systematic engagement of communities to understand the needs and resources of targeted segments of populations and to design the means to serve and engage with those populations. The process was utilized by libraries across the State and an adaptation continues in use.

Community Identification Process (CID): Co-directed the design and tailoring of a formative research method that supports providers and designers in effectively developing information about populations of interest. The initial use of the methodology was with HIV/AIDS clinic based staff to allow them to identify, understand, and work effectively with consumers including IV-drug users not in treatment, sex workers, men who have sex with men and do not gay identify, runaway and throw-away youth and sex partners of all identified populations. The methodology was adopted by the CDC and has been deemed an effective behavioral intervention. CDC’s training programs have been training providers for over 20 years in the method and it is used nationally in HIV and STD prevention and treatment.

HRSA’s Library of Practical Tools: Development, piloting, and dissemination of training modules for Community Health Center personnel nationally on critical issues in geriatric management and treatment. The library was distributed to over 2,500 community health centers nationally by HRSA. Modules developed included:

- General Geriatrics
- Alzheimer’s and Related Dementias
- Oral Health
- Minority Issues

Evaluation Capacity-Building Methods Seminars for Senior Health Officials from U.S. Pacific Trust Territories and Freely Associated States, Pacific Island Health Officers Association: Developed training curriculum and implemented seminars in the six Pacific jurisdictions. Each seminar was tailored to jurisdiction specific contexts.
