Welcome to the 80th annual meeting of the Society for Applied Anthropology, and to Albuquerque. This is the third time SfAA has met in Albuquerque (1995, 2014), and we are excited to be back in New Mexico’s largest city, known for its rich ethnic heritage and vibrant cultural and linguistic diversity. Our meeting has attracted over 1,300 registrants from 25 countries. Forty-nine of the 50 U.S. states are represented, as are the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico. SfAA’s 80th annual meeting certainly reflects the breadth of applied social science across the nation and around the world.

Albuquerque is an ideal venue for anthropologists and other applied social scientists to explore and reflect on this year’s theme: Cultural Citizenship and Diversity in Complex Societies. The program includes 238 sessions, 767 papers, as well panel discussions and roundtables. In addition, 91 posters afford researchers the opportunity to present their findings “up close and personal” with all who come their way. Many of the posters represent the work of students, both graduate and undergraduate, who are new at the “research game.” They are competing for three cash prizes awarded each year by the SfAA. So stop by the poster session, encourage and learn from your students, colleagues, friends—and glimpse where applied social science is headed in the years to come.

The program kicks off Tuesday morning with Albuquerque/New Mexico Day. Tuesday’s 22 sessions are open to the general public free of charge. They span topics ranging from community response to asylum seekers at the New Mexican border to protecting Native American water rights to cultural citizenship and tourism on Southwestern reservations to how Indigenous scholars apply anthropology. Of special interest will be two critical conversations:

- 75 Years of Resource Extraction and Environmental Contamination on Tribal Lands (10:00-11:50, Alvarado C). From 1944 through the Cold War, nearly 30 million tons of ore from 500 mines on the Navajo Nation supplied uranium for US atomic weapons. These communities still live with widespread persistent environmental hazards from slow cleanup of now-abandoned mines. This panel considers damage assessment, remediation, community actions and reactions to environmental degradation.

- Strangers in Town (Alvarado F, 12:00-1:20). This 33-minute film shows how global migration has transformed and enriched Garden City, Kansas, a metropolitan community that embraces immigration and diversity. Anthropologists who have studied Garden City since the 1980s, when it was part of the Ford Foundation’s Changing Relations Project, put the film in anthropological perspective.

Once again, the Hotel Albuquerque is hosting our meeting. Located in the heart of Albuquerque’s Old Town, it is close to important historic sites, museums, a wealth of good places to eat and drink, shops and galleries galore offering the best in regional fine arts and crafts. For those who may be visiting New Mexico for the first time, or those who want to enrich and enliven their return to the Land of Enchantment, SfAA offers tours of Petroglyphs National Monument (Wednesday and Saturday); Old Town Albuquerque (Friday and Saturday); and Al-brew-quere (Thursday and Friday), an organized visit to several of the city’s best known breweries. And Professor Orit Tamir will lead a tour of Laguna Pueblo’s Saint Joseph’s Feast Day, which includes the Buffalo, Butterfly, Eagle, and other traditional dances in the plaza.

Eleven workshops provide professional-skills training in such areas as cultural consensus analysis; filmmaking; strategies for engaging the public with social media; public participation mapping; and building professional networks. Workshops are held in Hotel Chaco, just behind Hotel Albuquerque’s Chapel.

The festivities officially begin Wednesday evening with the Welcome Reception, where you can bend jaws and elbows with old friends, make some new ones, and enjoy good (and free) food—if you’re fast enough. Entertainment will be provided by Mariachi Vaqueros de Highlands, courtesy of New Mexico Highlands University.

Sprinkled throughout the week are several distinguished lectures and award presentations. The J. Anthony Paredes Memorial Plenary (Wednesday, 5:30); the Robert A. and Beverly H. Hackenberg Prize and Lecture (Thursday, 10:00); Peter K. New Award (Thursday, 1:30); Michael Kearney Memorial Lecture (Thursday, 3:30); and the Pertti J. Pelto International Travel Award Lecture (Friday, 3:30). And you won’t want to miss the Annual Awards Ceremony Friday evening, when the winners of the Margaret Mead, Sol Tax, and Bronislaw Malinowski Awards are announced.

Many people worked very hard over the last year to put together the program for SfAA 2020 and to ensure that our 80th annual meeting is successful. Program Chair Lois Stanford and her outstanding program committee framed the provocative and timely theme and then put together an array of papers, panels, roundtables, and workshops to explore cultural citizenship and diversity in complex societies. Laura Kriegstrom Stull designed the logo to reflect this year’s theme and location. The SfAA’s topical interest groups (TIGs), special committees and groups, as well as several cosponsoring professional organizations played a vital role by encouraging their members’ participation and by organizing sessions. As in past years, New Mexico Highlands University was especially supportive of our meeting. These individuals and organizations are acknowledged elsewhere in the program.

The SfAA Office keeps the trains running—and running on time. Most of their work goes unnoticed and unheralded, but without SfAA Executive Director Neil Hann, Office Manager Trish Colvin, and Annual Meeting Program Administrator Melissa Cope our society could not function, let alone organize and pull off the successful annual meetings for which SfAA is known. They scout potential meeting sites; negotiate favorable hotel rates; process meeting registrations, session and paper abstracts; print the program; coordinate on-site registration; provide and set up audiovisuals; and come running whenever and wherever they are needed. So, if you get the chance, thank them for all they do for the Society for Applied Anthropology and its members. It will mean a lot to them.

And finally, thank you for helping make SfAA 2020 a memorable meeting.

Native American Cultural Resource Management: Sovereignty Over the Past

Cultural resource management (CRM) is a critical means for Native people who live in complex and diverse societies to enhance and defend their sovereignty and human rights. This roundtable discussion, with participants who are citizens of and who work in Native American communities, focuses on how CRM and other applied anthropological methods provide mechanisms for communities to explore, document and analyze their own pasts, as well as to develop interpretations in keeping with community standards. The navigation of this complex terrain is discussed by participants in the panel and based in their own research and applied work in this field.

ORGANIZER: Kelly Fayard (U Denver)
CHAIR: Heidi Altman (GA Southern U)

PANELISTS:
Davina Two Bears (Indiana U)
Woody Aguilar (U Penn)
Tony Chavarria (Museum of Indian Art & Culture)
Brad Vierra (NMSU)
Nicholas C. Laluk (NAU)

The James Anthony “Tony” Paredes Memorial Session honors the memory and career of the prominent scholar and anthropologist.

Tony was professor of anthropology for 30 years at Florida State University, becoming professor emeritus in 1999. After arriving at FSU, Tony began research among the Poarch Band of Creeks in Alabama in 1971, forging a relationship that lasted until his death. Tony was instrumental in obtaining federal acknowledgment and recognition of the Poarch Creeks as an Indian tribe in 1984.

Tony served on AAA’s Executive Board and was past president of the Association of Senior Anthropologists, the Society for Applied Anthropology, and the Southern Anthropological Society.

Refugee and Immigrant Well-Being Project: A Community-University Partnership to Create Social Change

The Refugee Well-being Project (RWP) is a community-based participatory research project designed to better understand resettlement stressors, prevent psychological distress, and promote mental health, well-being, and integration of refugees and other newcomers in the United States. For more than 20 years, RWP has engaged undergraduate students and newcomers in mutual learning and mobilization of community resources. Through these processes, newcomers’ cultures, experiences, and knowledge are valued and utilized in the promotion of their well-being and communities’ responsiveness to newcomers is also improved. RWP employs an ecological perspective that takes into account the multiple systems and contexts that affect newcomer well-being. By design, the program has the potential to incorporate the strengths and needs of refugees while addressing multiple aspects of the empowerment process to work towards social change.

RWP was first developed and implemented in partnership with Hmong refugees at Michigan State University in 2000. In 2006, RWP began implementation at the University of New Mexico with refugees from Liberia and the Great Lakes region of Africa (Burundi, Democratic Republic of Congo, Republic of Congo and Rwanda). From 2009-2012, the RWP was adapted and implemented with refugees from Iraq. Following many years of longitudinal mixed method research, RWP received a grant from the National Institute on Minority Health and Health Disparities to conduct a randomized controlled trial with Afghan, Great Lakes African, Iraqi, and Syrian participants from 2013-2018. After generating conclusive quantitative and qualitative evidence of its effectiveness, the RWP is no longer a study and is now being led by refugee community leaders. However, we continue to work to advance the science of community-based social justice research through the Immigrant Well-being Project study to adapt the RWP model and implement it with Latinx immigrant families as a core research project of the Transdisciplinary Research Equity and Engagement (TREE) Center, which is funded by the National Institutes of Health at UNM from 2017-2022. Recently, the project has been renamed the Refugee and Immigrant Well-being Project. https://rwp.unm.edu/

In 2008, family and friends of the late Robert A. Hackenberg established a memorial lecture in his honor. It was renamed the Robert A. and Beverly H. Hackenberg Lecture in 2017 to acknowledge the singular contributions of both of these anthropologists in the application of the social sciences to medical care, population dynamics, and economic development. The Society recognized Robert and Beverly Hackenberg with the prestigious Bronislaw Malinowski Award in 1998, making them the only professional couple to receive such an honor.

Peter Kong-Ming New

The Peter K. New Competition and Award honors the memory of the late Professor Peter Kong-ming New, a distinguished medical sociologist-anthropologist and former President of the Society. The interests of Peter K. New were wide-ranging, as seen in his studies on food cultists, faith healers, osteopathic students, stroke victims, alcoholics, nurses, public housing residents, medical missionaries in modern China, and the plight of incoming U.S. minority groups fighting to control their health care.
The Lecture celebrates the life and work of Michael Kearney, late of the University of California, Riverside.

Each year, the Lecture Committee selects an outstanding scholar whose presentation will explore the intersection of three themes - migration, human rights, transnationalism. These three themes were central to Prof. Kearney's scholarship. They were first explored in his doctoral research “The Winds of Ixtepeji.” His subsequent research led to a greater involvement in the formulation of public policy, and the commitment to use his discipline to understand and assist the development of indigenous migrant organizations.

Dr. Besserer has worked extensively on problem-solving research in association with traditional governments of transnational communities stretching across México and the United States. In 1999 Dr. Besserer and Dr. Michael Kearney (UCR) launched a research and teaching collaboration, committed to problems and questions regarding the lives and wellbeing of transnational peoples. Among other books, his work on transnational communities includes the research results of a collective ethnography edited with Michael Kearney: San Juan Mixtepec. A Transnational Community Facing the Classifying and Filtering Power of Borders (San Juan Mixtepec. Una comunidad transnacional ante el poder clasificador y filtrador de las fronteras). Juan Pablos, Editor – UAM. (2006)

In the last ten years, Dr. Besserer has conducted a research project with a global reach, including Asia, Africa, Europe and the Americas, exploring how transnational urban spaces such as transnational streets and neighborhoods, articulate the margins of the cities into a planetary network to which we can refer as the transnational city. One of the books resulting from this project is Urban Intersections. Transnational City / Global City (Intersecciones urbanas. Ciudad transnacional / Ciudad global) Juan Pablos, Editor – UAM (2016). His latest book, Transnational Studies. Anthropological Keys. (Estudios transnacionales. Claves desde la antropología), Juan Pablos, Editor – UAM (2019) explores the encounters and dis-encounters of theoretical and practical perspectives in the construction of the field of transnational studies.

Federico Besserer received a master’s degree from the Department of Anthropology at UCR, and a Ph.D. in anthropology from Stanford University. He is professor at the Department of Anthropology of the Autonomous Metropolitan University, Campus Iztapalapa (UAM-I) in Mexico.
WAPA PRAXIS AWARD
CEREMONY AND RECEPTION

Thursday, March 19, 5:30-7:20, Tablao

Since 1981, the Washington Association of Professional Anthropologists has presented the Praxis Award to recognize outstanding achievement in translating anthropological knowledge into action as reflected in a single project.

Finalists: 2019-2020 Competition

Birangona: Towards Ethical Testimonies of Sexual Violence During Conflict
(setting Bangladesh)

Nayanika Mookherjee (Durham U)

This project developed guidelines and a graphic novel in Bangla and English to support ethical behavior in documenting testimonies of sexual violence during conflict. It seeks to change both ideas and practices and contribute to the welfare of survivors.

Complex Households and the Undercount of Young Children
(setting U.S.-wide)

Laurie Schwede, Eric Jensen, Deborah Griffin, and Scott Konicki (U.S. Census Bureau)

In the 2010 U.S. Census, young children had the highest net undercount rate of any age cohort. To address this, researchers analyzed data through a new complex household typology. The Census Bureau will use this innovation in the 2020 Population Census.

Deal Island Peninsula Project
(setting Chesapeake Bay, U.S.)

Michael Paolisso, Katherine Johnson, Elizabeth Van Dolah, and Christine Miller Hesed (UMD)

Developed by anthropologists in collaboration with environmental researchers, resource managers, and local communities, the project applies anthropological theory and methods to improve the climate adaptation and resilience of the Deal Island Peninsula.
Pelto International Travel Award

Wine & Cheese Social

Friday, 3:30-5:20 in the Tablao

The Pelto International Travel Award is presented to a mid-career applied social scientist from outside the U.S. The Award allows the scholar/practitioner to attend the SFAA annual meeting and enhance his/her interaction and exchange across national boundaries.

The Award grew out of the efforts of Bert’s colleagues and former students who sought to honor him by encouraging his lifelong interest in developing and nurturing international exchange. The Award is mutually beneficial – the visiting scholar/practitioner has the opportunity to develop new and productive professional relationships, and through that participation, the content and conversation of the SFAA annual meeting is expanded.

Diego Díaz Córdova

Diego Díaz Córdova holds a PhD in Anthropology Sciences, Universidad de Buenos Aires and is Professor at Universidad de Lanús, Universidad de Buenos Aires and Universidad Museo Social Argentino. He is a researcher and software developer with interests in nutritional anthropology, anthropology of arts and methodology (social network analysis, simulation models, data science, ethnography and statistics).
AWARDS CEREMONY
FRIDAY, MARCH 20
7:00-9:30, Alvarado D

Bronislaw Malinowski Award

The Malinowski Award will be presented to Elizabeth K. Briody, Ph.D. Briody has been involved in cultural-change efforts for over 30 years – first at General Motors Research and later through her consulting practice, Cultural Keys. Her career has focused on organizational culture with the goal of improving its effectiveness. She especially loves doing fieldwork in manufacturing plants! Recent books include Cultural Change from a Business Anthropology Perspective (with Maryann McCabe), The Cultural Dimension of Global Business (8th ed., with Gary Ferraro), and the award-winning Transforming Culture (with Bob Trotter and Tracy Meerwarth).

Briody is Secretary of the American Anthropological Association and Treasurer of the Consortium of Practicing and Applied Anthropology Programs.

Sol Tax Distinguished Service Award

The Sol Tax Distinguished Service Award will be presented to Dr. Susan Andreatta, Professor of Applied Sociocultural Anthropology at the University of North Carolina, Greensboro.

The Award recognizes and honors long-term and exceptional service to the Society. Dr. Andreatta was selected for the Tax Award on the basis of her lengthy and valuable service to the Society - as a member of several committees, member of the Executive Committee, Board of Directors, and as President (2008-2009).

Margaret Mead Award

The Award will be presented to Dr. Claudio Sopranzetti for his book, Owners of the Map: Motorcycle Taxi Drivers, Mobility, and Politics in Bangkok. Sopranzetti is an Assistant Professor of Anthropology at the Central European University. He received his PhD in 2013 from Harvard University and, before moving to CEU, held an All Souls Postdoctoral Research Fellowship at Oxford University. He is the author of Red Journeys (Silkworm Books 2012) and recently published The King of Bangkok, his first anthropological graphic novel (Toronto Univ. Press).
How to Use This Program

Sessions are identified with an alphanumeric code that indicates the session number and day of the week. For example, W-80 represents session 80 on Wednesday, and T-15 represents session 15 on Tuesday. Abstracts are in alphabetical order by presenter or session organizer. At the end of each abstract is the alphanumeric code that refers to the session location in the program schedule. The Participant Index lists the page numbers where each participant may be found in the program schedule and abstracts.

A Note About Abstracts

Individuals were given a choice to include their e-mail addresses in the program. Those who selected have their e-mail address printed at the end of the abstract. Those who declined do not have their e-mail address printed. For those registrants who did not indicate their preference, their e-mail addresses were not printed. Please note that paper abstracts are published online only at: appliedanthro.org/program

Student Lounge

The SfAA is proud to announce that The Casa Esencia (in front of the Hotel Albuquerque) will be available 8-5 Thursday and Friday to host the inaugural Student Lounge at the Annual Meeting. This is a designated space for student members to relax, recharge, and network with others throughout the conference.
Resolution on Commitment to Safe and Equitable Work and Educational Conditions

Recent attention to gender discrimination and sexual harassment in the sciences, including the social sciences, reminds us of the importance of adhering to standards of ethical and professional behavior. Our Code of Ethics specifically states that:

To our social colleagues we have the responsibility to not engage in actions that impede their reasonable professional activities.

To our students, interns, or trainees, we owe nondiscriminatory access to our training services.

These responsibilities are inclusive of a commitment to providing safe and equitable environments for anthropological, and more broadly social scientific, inquiry and work. Experts in the fields of gender discrimination and sexual harassment offer presentations at the Society’s annual meetings and publish in the Society’s journals. We encourage members who are interested in learning more about ways of promoting safe and equitable work and educational conditions to reach out to other Society members for information, consultation, and referrals. The Society sponsors a Topical Interest Group devoted to the study of gender-based violence, and Society members are encouraged to contact the Gender-Based Violence Topical Interest Group for 1) scholarship related to gender discrimination and sexual harassment and/or 2) instructional material to support accessible work and educational settings for all.

Therefore, be it resolved that the Society for Applied Anthropology is committed to supporting and encouraging safe and equitable work and educational conditions for our members.

Quiet Room

The Q-Bar Lounge will be available 8-5 Monday-Friday and Saturday 8-12 for anyone needing a respite. This will be a space for members to work, read, or relax without distraction or disruption during the Annual Meeting. Please silence digital devices and refrain from phone calls or conversations in this room.

TUESDAY, MARCH 17

ALBUQUERQUE / NEW MEXICO DAY

Welcome to the Society for Applied Anthropology’s “Albuquerque / New Mexico Day.” The presentations and events scheduled for this day should be of particular interest to residents of the Albuquerque area. Anthropologists, and other applied social scientists have joined with interested residents to examine the region’s remarkably diverse heritage, its complex and challenging present, and its future as a world destination. We are opening this day to the public free of charge as an expression of our commitment to engage with the public in an exploration of our shared social and cultural worlds.

WAPA Praxis Award Ceremony and Reception

Since 1981, the Washington Association of Professional Anthropologists has presented the Praxis Award to recognize outstanding achievement in translating anthropological knowledge into action as reflected in a single project.

FINALISTS: 2019-2020 Competition

MOOKHERJEE, Nayanika (Durham U) Birangona: Towards Ethical Testimonies of Sexual Violence During Conflict (setting Bangladesh). This project developed guidelines and a graphic novel in Bangla and English to support ethical behavior in documenting testimonies of sexual violence during conflict. It seeks to change both ideas and practices and contribute to the welfare of survivors.

SCHWEDE, Laurie, JENSEN, Eric, GRIFFIN, Deborah, and KONICKI, Scott (U.S. Census Bureau) Complex Households and the Undercount of Young Children (setting U.S.-wide) In the 2010 U.S. Census young children had the highest net undercount rate of any age cohort. To address this, researchers analyzed data through a new complex household typology. The Census Bureau will use this innovation in the 2020 Population Census.

PAOLISSO, Michael, JOHNSON, Katherine, VAN DOLAH, Elizabeth, and MILLER HESD, Christine (UMD) Deal Island Peninsula Project (setting Chesapeake Bay, U.S.) Developed by anthropologists in collaboration with environmental researchers, resource managers, and local communities, the project applies anthropological theory and methods to improve the climate adaptation and resilience of the Deal Island Peninsula.

Dance Performance (Immigration TIG)

MARCONI, Veronica (OR State U) Embodying Ethnographic Messages: Expressing Research through Dance

Artistic expressions that differ from writing may help maintain the vitality of the messages we wish to share. They infuse our work with renewed enthusiasm, and add visual and energetic components that can communicate with our audiences in less conventional manners. This dance performance embodies some of the messages of my research on transnational migrants and the anti-trafficking apparatus in Italy. It aims to embody the energy behind the unseen gifts and socio-cultural enrichment that migrants bring to other countries, as well as the exploitation and suffering many experience.

NAPA Networking Event

The NAPA Networking Event is a chance to network with professional anthropologists in a social setting. In preparation for employment as an anthropologist it is important to build a network of professionals who can show us our options and provide advice about what we can do and where we might go. This event is designed for students, recent graduates, and early career professionals. Snacks will be provided.

Celebration of the Life and Work of June Nash, Distinguished Professor Emerita of Anthropology, CUNY (1927-2019)

Join us this evening to celebrate June Nash: scholar, teacher, mentor, feminist, political economist, mother, friend, wife, and extraordinary human. The impact of June’s work and life reaches far: her decades of teaching at the Graduate Center at City University of New York and her longstanding fieldwork in the Americas resulted ethnographies, activism, and even marriages. Among her classic works are We Eat the Mines and the Mines Eat Us: Dependency and Exploitation in Bolivian Tin Mines (Columbia, 1979) and From Tank Town to High Tech: The Clash of Community and Industrial Cycles (SUNY 1989). Those who knew June remember her as an indefatigable fieldworker, dedicated professor, and thrower of the best parties. Please come raise a toast to this exceptional, influential anthropologist and share your favorite June stories.

ALEXANDER, Sara (Baylor U) Human Rights and the Environment in the Context of Climate Change. Climate change threatens the fundamental interdependence that exists between human rights and environmental quality. Humanity’s reliance on a healthy environment makes such a right a prerequisite to the enjoyment of other human rights. Local populations not technically indigenous are most vulnerable because they have received less entitlement to natural resources through international law. Climate change exacerbates challenges to populations who are unable to claim basic rights such as self-determination, autonomy, or traditional land rights. These papers explore human responses to climate change in terms of shifting value systems, changing worldviews, adjustments in how certain human rights are conceptualized, and redefining goals for the future. sara_alexander@baylor.edu (TH-05)

ALEXANDER, William (UNCW) The Future of Forever Chemicals?: Citizen Participation and Rising Awareness of Toxic Contamination in a Time of Deregulation. There is growing public awareness of the health effects of exposure to Per- and Polyfluoroalkyl Substances (PFAS) – often called “Forever Chemicals” because they do not degrade in the environment and persistently remain in the body. Exposure has been linked to kidney and liver disease, cancers, and numerous other conditions. Many states are enacting strict standards limiting PFAS contamination. How is public awareness translating into action? What strategies are organizers using to form effective coalitions? How are they engaging policy-makers to hold polluting industries accountable? What challenges do groups face in this period of deregulation of environmental protection and science? alexanderw@uncw.edu (TH-156)

ALTMAN, Heidi (GA Southern U) and FAYARD, Kelly (U Denver) Native American Cultural Resource Management: Sovereignty Over the Past. Cultural resource management (CRM) is a critical means for Native people who live in complex and diverse societies to enhance and defend their sovereignty and human rights. This roundtable discussion, with participants who are citizens of and who work in Native American communities, focuses on how CRM and other applied anthropological methods provide mechanisms for communities to explore, document and analyze their own pasts, as well as to develop interpretations in keeping with community standards. The navigation of this complex terrain is discussed by participants in the panel and based in their own research and applied work in this field. heidi.altman@gmail.com (W-154)

ANDREATTA, Susan (UNCG) and MARKOWITZ, Lisa (U Louisville) Teaching Food Politics in Trumpian Times: Reflections and Strategies. Over the years we have seen an increase in food-related degree programs and courses in Anthropology and sister-disciplines. Food offers an avenue for experiential learning on many fronts and in the proposed roundtable we focus on course work which explicitly promotes engagement in political and social activism. University faculty will describe efforts to incorporate active learning in such arenas as electoral politics, climate change, food security, food justice, and migrant labor into their courses. Presenters are asked to recount successes, challenges and their resolution or lack thereof. We invite audience participation in applying anthropology in the agrifood system. s_andreatta@uncg.edu (W-61)

ARTZ, Matt (Azimuth Labs) Less Common Applications of Business Anthropology. Historically when people discussed business anthropology, organizational and consumer research roles were at the forefront of the conversation. Today, that conversation has shifted to user experience (UX). While these are all critical applications of business anthropology, there are other roles that students and practitioners should consider. This panel explores less common applications of business anthropology through the work of five early-career business anthropologists working in digital product management, social impact storytelling, thought leadership insights, strategic operations management, and architecture. The panelists will share their experiences with applying the theories and methods of the discipline at the frontier of business anthropology. ma@mattartz.me (S-13)

AUSTIN, Diane (U Arizona) Can Household Solar Technologies Help Us Achieve Energy Justice? Southwestern U.S. and northwestern Mexico are characterized by hot, arid conditions expected to become more extreme in coming years. Tucson, AZ is already the U.S.’s third fastest-warming city. Such conditions may favor adoption of solar technologies, but lack of knowledge and pre-existing vulnerabilities including inadequate housing and economic instability prevent many households from participating. Collaborators from the University of Arizona Bureau of Applied Research in Anthropology and Climate Assessment for the Southwest, Sonora Environmental Research Institute, and Universidad Tecnológico de Nogales will guide discussion of environmental and social issues affecting accessibility of solar technologies and efforts to achieve energy justice. daustin@email.arizona.edu (W-96)

BAILEY, Eric (ECU) Human Rights and Social Justice: Setting Our Vision for the Future. The Human Rights and Social Justice committee plays a pivotal role for SfAA in building collaborative relationships with human rights and professional associations, develops and provides resources to its members, and creates a community of people dedicated to social justice issues. Establishing our specific areas of interests and action items for the immediate future is critical to the continual growth of our committee. This open discussion provides members to re-examine and debate HRSJ issues such as global health inequities, immigration, political conflicts with indigenous rights, homelessness, gender, activism, race and ethnic relations. bailey@ecu.edu (W-62)

BAKER, Beth (CSULA) Belonging beyond Citizenship: Mobility and Exclusion in an Era of Hate. Human mobility is central for survival as violence, racism, and climate change make it impossible for people to stay put. Governing institutions are inadequate to address human crises related to mobility. Border walls, concentration camps, and migrant exclusion are key fulcrums of violence around the world. This panel explores conflicts around citizenship, belonging, and rights, including Central Americans on the Mexico-U.S. border, the immigrants’ rights movement in the U.S, public opinion of ICE, and women in the U.S.-Mexico border zone fighting for healthcare. We are interested in discourses of belonging and exclusion and emergent forms of collective resistance. bbakers@calstatela.edu (W-153)

BARGIELSKI, Richard (USF) More-Than-Human Approaches to Environmental Learning, Part I: More-Than-Human Approaches to Risk. Multispecies ethnographies, seeking to understand the important role of non-humans in human social life, have gained traction as a novel approach among anthropologists and related fields. Drawing on post-humanist philosophy, multispecies frameworks have not been readily integrated by many applied anthropologists to date. This session asks: What are the possible opportunities and limitations for more-than-human ethnography among applied anthropologists? How do notions of non-human agency contribute to the ability of environmental anthropologists to produce meaningful applied work? Papers in this session will develop operational examples of applied multispecies ethnography through community engagement and environmental education. bargielski@mail.usf.edu (TH-96)

BARGIELSKI, Richard (USF) More-Than-Human Approaches to Environmental Learning, Part II: Imagining More-Than-Human Futures. Drawing on post-humanist philosophy, multispecies frameworks have not been readily integrated by many applied anthropologists to date. This session asks: What are the possible opportunities and limitations for more-than-human ethnography among applied anthropologists? BARNES, Kathrine (Marshfield Clinic Rsch Inst) Risksy Childhoods: Conceptualizing Risk Taking as a Part of Childhood and Human Development. Traumatic injury is the leading cause of death in children after infancy (Dowd). Yet, some research extolls the benefits of risky play for its ability to teach children how to regulate fear and anger (LaFreniere). Lack of play, such researchers say, results in neurotism and psychopathology (Gray). Then, how can adults (i.e., parents, guardians, teachers, researchers, etc.) balance risks with benefits and reach consensus with experts on this contentious issue? What can anthropology teach us of risk conceptualization to guide the public’s decision-making? What examples exist in other related fields and other societies (past or current) that help shed light on different perspectives? barnes.kate@marshfieldresearch.org (S-15)

BERNSTEIN, Bruce (Pueblo of Pojoaque) and MARKS, Jamie-Lee (NPS) New Mexico's Tribal Historic Preservation Offices and Tribal Heritage Outreach and Education: Successes and Challenges. This roundtable discusses the crucial work that Tribal Historic Preservation Offices (THPOs) in New Mexico do to sustain programs connecting tribal members/youth to history and heritage. Case studies presented by four Tribal Historic Preservation Officers explore how place-based programs, partnerships, and wisdom garnered through landscape, ethnographic, and oral history research help THPOs meaningfully engage about tribal values and history. This roundtable allows THPOs protecting tribal historic/cultural resources in New Mexico share successes and challenges faced in education and outreach initiatives, as well as about the role of THPOs in engaging the next generation of historic preservation and heritage professionals. (T-37)

BOCHNIAK, Victoria (UMass) Intimate Epistemologies: Making and Remaking Knowledge in Graduate School. Graduate students often have personal experiences outside academia that have profound impacts on their research, academic careers, and livelihoods. These sometimes publicly known and intimate encounters—that are frequently structured through systems of oppression, exploitation, and alienation at the university and beyond—affect students’ abilities to meet markers of success in graduate school, impact mental health and overall well-being, and can affect personal and professional relationships. This session aims to share stories that are all too often under-discussed in graduate school and that are even less discussed as being important and integral to research and knowledge production. vbochniaq@umass.edu (F-75)

BRIODY, Elizabeth (Cultural Keys LLC) What We Can Learn from COPA’s ‘Business Anthropology on the Road.’ Business Anthropology on the Road is a COPA-sponsored initiative that travels to anthropology programs for a two-day series of workshops, interactive discussions, and seminars. It is designed to assist anthropology programs with professionalization skills for students and provide content knowledge in major domains of business anthropology (i.e., marketing and advertising, design, and organizational culture and change). Conceptualized in spring 2018, it has been one model for filling gaps or supplementing departmental offerings. Participants describe their experiences with the “road show,” summarize lessons from the on-site evaluation data, and discuss its future potential within the discipline. elizabeth.briody@gmail.com (W-43)

BROOKS, Benjamin (ECU) and IRONS, Rebecca (U Coll London) Anthropological Perspectives on Women’s Health: Explorations of Latin American Populations in Peru and the United States. Andean Highland populations in Peru and Hispanic migrants from Latin America face difficulties related to access to adequate housing and healthcare. This research focuses on women in Latin America who are often a marginalized group facing particular kinds of hardships. This panel will explore health, stress, and trauma through the varied but interrelated experiences of women in the Andes and in the Southern United States. Ethnographic accounts from the field will be used to demonstrate how cultural data can be applied to address community level problems. This research will aim to foment discussion on how Latin American experiences of health and marginality connect. brooksb@ecu.edu (W-08)

BROWN, Brenda (Independent) Cultural Citizenship, Post-migration, and Trauma, Part I. How do refugees, immigrants, or those marginalized cope with the challenges they face in culturally foreign settings or in institutions? How can health care providers ease the suffering and trauma of refugees, immigrants and those who are marginalized? What are the obstacles in crossing borders both literally and figuratively? How can health care professionals facilitate this transition? How do bonds form between people from different nation-states, cultures, and experiences? The papers in this session explore these questions and others involving language translation and interpretation. Furthermore, cultural citizenship and socio-political concerns are also explored and some possible solutions offered. rnkssa2015@gmail.com (TH-04)

CALAMIA, Mark (NPS) Representing Diversity and Minority Voices throughout Our National Parks: Some Examples from the NPS Cultural Anthropology Program, Parts I-II. Engaging contemporary cultural communities in planning and public programming continues to be an emphasis of the NPS Cultural Anthropology Program. In a double roundtable session, NPS anthropologists and a superintendent will present case studies and examples, from across the country, on the influence of decolonization on NPS work with Mexican-Americans, African-Americans, Native Americans, and Alaskan Natives. The roundtable will discuss how cultural beliefs, values, knowledge, and practices are incorporated into planning and shared with the public. Examples will include storytelling, ethnographic overviews, interpretative programs, museum exhibits, and resource management and use. mark_calamia@nps.gov (S-08, S-38)

CANNON, Terry (Inst of Dev Studies), WILKINSON, Olivia (Joint Learning Initiative on Faith & Local Communities) and HOFFMAN, Susanna (Hoffman Consulting) Sense and Nonsense: Bogus Categories and Saying What We Mean in Disaster Research, Part I. Disaster research and practice is laden with terminology that is partly determined by funding mechanisms and priorities of the institutions that dominate disaster risk reduction. Concepts that we use in academic research have become tainted by the problem that many of these institutions want to avoid looking at disaster (especially vulnerability and poverty) causation. The panel will discuss a range of these concepts, including “community,” “resilience,” “network,” “localized,” “stakeholder,” “vulnerability,” “sympathy” in humanitarian activities. Can they be considered as ‘bogus’ – are these concepts co-opted by systems of power that prefer to ignore or play down causation in analysing disaster risk and climate change? t.cannon@ids.ac.uk (W-04)

CANNON, Terry (Inst of Dev Studies) and OLIVER-SMITH, Tony (UFL) Sense and Nonsense: Bogus Categories and Saying What We Mean in Disaster Research, Part II. Disaster research and practice is laden with terminology that is partly determined by funding mechanisms and priorities of the institutions that dominate disaster risk reduction. Concepts that we use in academic research have become tainted by the problem that many of these institutions want to avoid looking at disaster (especially vulnerability and poverty) causation. The panel will follow up on the papers from Part I and are going to introduce their ‘favourite’ concepts that need deconstructing. These will include: community, resilience, network, localized stakeholder, vulnerability, sympathy. Can they be considered as ‘bogus’ through being co-opted by systems of power that prefer to ignore or play down causation in analysing disaster risk and climate change? t.cannon@ids.ac.uk (W-34)

CARATTINI, Amy and SPREHN, Maria (Montgomery Coll) Teaching Race and Ethnicity. For over a century, anthropologists have examined the concepts of race and ethnicity, however, an understanding of how these categories are socially and culturally constructed is not always visible in the public purview or at institutional levels. In this arena, anthropology needs more visibility. To continue the educational goals of the RACE Project, this panel explores possibilities and new methods for teaching students and the general public about anthropological knowledge on race and ethnicity. The end goal is to impact personal and public understandings so that the anthropological perspective is applied to policy at various levels and to community building. amy.carattini@montgomerycollege.edu (S-35)

CASAGRANDE, David (Lehigh U) From Passivity to Panic: Responding to Climate Change in the United States. A major challenge for anthropologists and policy makers working in the U.S. is to minimize the impacts of adaptation to climate change, especially for marginalized and vulnerable populations. Utilizing ethnographic methods, we examine how people talk about and make decisions about climate change. Researchers in this session analyze topics such as relocation, climate panic, discourse framing and ethnoecological models of climate change with the goal of promoting social justice, climate action, conflict resolution and practical solutions. dac511@lehigh.edu (TH-95)

CHAIKEN, Miriam (NMSU) and COMPANION, Michele (UCCS) How Do Indigenous Scholars Apply Anthropology? This panel brings together Indigenous scholars who share a common academic history of studying anthropology. This panel brings Native American scholars and activists for a discussion about the ways in which their anthropological studies influence their post-university professional lives, and the ways in which Native perspectives can in turn influence the discipline as a whole. We will foster conversations about the present and future of the discipline of anthropology, how this has been shaped by the historical roots of the discipline, and how a more inclusive perspective will shape future anthropological praxis. mchaiken@nmsu.edu (T-127)

CHRISTIE, Jessica (ECU) Cultural Citizenship and Tourism: Changing Encounters in Colonial and Post-Colonial Contexts. In many tourism encounters, the worlds of the Euroamerican, white and upper middle-class tourist and Native, low-income hosts clash in a Colonial structure that has been chronologically conditioned and sanctified. This session interrogates: why have Native hosts been perceived as parallel to native flora and fauna? in eco-tourism, what happens if the tourist is not white? Is “exotic” the same as “authentic”? Can indigenous hosts have cultural citizenship in two worlds? Can anthropologists intervene toward de-colonizing tourism encounters? The session invites diverse case scenarios to test for common threads which might be used as applied lessons. christiej@ecu.edu (W-12)

CHRISTIE, Jessica (ECU) Cultural Citizenship and Tourism: Colonial and De-Colonial Encounters on the Reservations in the Southwest. Since approximately the 1920s, travel into the Southwest has steadily increased and turned into a multi-million dollar tourism business. Native Americans have been viewed as part of the grandiose desert landscape. When they refused to be annihilated or assimilated, they began to be perceived with an aura of exoticism, as people who must have something “authentic” which eludes Western colonial efforts to possess. Most tourists come to experience such things “exotic” and “authentic.” christiej@ecu.edu (T-94)

CLAY, Patricia M. (NOAA Fisheries) and FISKE, Shirley (UMD) Climate Change in the Coastal and Marine Environment: Impacts and Adaptation, Parts I-II. For decades the oceans have absorbed heat and CO2, contributing to stability for coastal zones with relatively small impacts to the marine environment. That is no longer the case. As a result, both communities in the coastal zone and those who make their living at sea are being impacted in new and more challenging ways. Reactions of those impacted have been diverse, ranging from unbelief to active adaptation. This session explores specific examples of some of those reactions and their implications for the future coastal communities and marine-based occupations. Patricia.M.Clay@noaa.gov (F-97, F-127)

COLOM, Alejandra (Labetnografico/UVG) Corporate and Urban Anthropology in Guatemala: Methods, Challenges, and Opportunities. This session presents new fields of applied research and engagement in Guatemala, from corporate banking to recycling entrepreneurship and the creative methods to engage reluctant stakeholders like retailers and engineers. The discussion will focus on how to successfully present anthropology as a tool for creative corporate re-thinking. ale@labetnografico.com (W-13)

CONCHA-HOLMES, Amanda and OLIVER-SMITH, Anthony (UFL) Disasters in Paradise: Natural Hazards, Social Vulnerability, and Development Decisions. Long considered ground zero for global climate change in the United States, Florida presents the perfect case study for disaster risk and prevention. Building on the idea that disasters are produced by historical and contemporary social processes as well as natural phenomena, Amanda D. Concha-Holmes and Anthony Oliver-Smith present a collection of ethnographic case studies that examine the social and environmental effects of Florida’s public and private sector development policies. Contributors to Disasters in Paradise explore how these practices have increased the vulnerability of Floridians to hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, droughts, frosts, and forest fires. amanda.d.concha.holmes@gmail.com (W-71)

DE PREE, Thomas (Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst) and GRANT, Sonia (U Chicago) Extraction in the Mineral Age in the U.S. Southwest. In the last 15 years, we have experienced a global expansion and intensification in mineral resource extraction, which has wrought environmental impacts, social conflict, and massive transformations in livelihoods (Jacka 2018). The purpose of this panel is to discuss how mineral resource extraction at the peak of the “mineral age” has impacted the U.S. Southwest. Against the background of deeper historical periodizations and chronologies of the growth and development of scientific mineralogy and industrial mining and metallurgy, we seek to understand this contemporary moment of extraction through our respective ethnographic experiences in the Southwest. (T-123)

DESMOND, Kathleen (ASU) The Role of Art Criticism in Higher Education. Art Criticism, “informed talk about art for the purpose of understanding and appreciating of art” or “educating the public about visual art and why it matters” is different from critique. Art criticism engages several kinds of audiences - teachers, students, scholars, connoisseurs, aficionados, neophytes and naïve audiences - in looking, listening, and thinking. Art criticism includes several publics. Critique helps artists improve their work. This presentation will consider who art critics are, the professional practice of art criticism, and teaching art criticism in higher education. What are the effects of art criticism on different audiences? A lively discussion will ensue! desmond@ucmo.edu (S-45)

DEUBEL, Tara and BARBIER, Clarisse (USF) Women’s Perspectives on Gender-based Violence in the US and Abroad. On a global scale, gender-based violence (GBV) takes on multiple dimensions ranging from physical and sexual violence to economic and political disenfranchisement and social exclusion. This panel brings together researchers from the University of South Florida working in the US and developing countries in Africa and Latin America to explore issues of gender-based violence and forms of exclusion that impact women. Through a human rights perspective, we will explore the policy context affecting violence, including legal protections for women, reflect on experiences working with participants affected by trauma, and discuss the role of applied anthropology in combating GBV. deubel@usf.edu (W-05)

DRESSLER, William (U Alabama) Locating Individuals in the Space of Culture. The metaphor of culture as a space of meaning is used commonly in anthropological theory. In a recent paper, Dressler (2019) proposed a model derived from cognitive culture theory in which shared knowledge, contested understanding, and social practice could be conceptualized as three independent dimensions that structure a space of culture. This model provides an overall framework for the papers in this session. Each participant offers empirical examples of locating individuals in a space of culture and the implications for health and well-being of that location. These examples suggest a path from metaphor to measurement in the study of culture. wdressler@as.ua.edu (TH-39)
EMERSON, Christie (Kennesaw State U) Care and Diversity in Complex Societies, Part II. This session seeks to answer questions regarding health care delivery in diverse settings. What coping mechanisms do individuals employ in dealing with their health issues? What socio-political, historical and economic circumstances lead or contributed to the health burdens experienced by vulnerable groups? How do indigenous communities defend their interests, culturally and otherwise? This session draws on experiences of nurses and other health care professionals in providing care to various populations in our complex, globalized world. Training the next generation of health care professionals and use of social networks among health professionals are also discussed. cemerson@kennesaw.edu (W-128)

FARO, Elissa (Albert Einstein Med Coll) and CHOKSHI, Sara (NYU Med Sch) Brokering Anthropological Knowledge in Healthcare Organizations. Medical anthropology has become more applied in US healthcare organizations recently. Anthropologists are working at healthcare organizations producing research, improving care delivery and quality, and working to understand how interventions and evidence-based best practices are implemented across large-scale systems. The production of anthropological knowledge in these contexts allows organizations to construct solutions by grounding processes of learning and innovation in the larger social context within which they occur (Bray 2010). How medical anthropologists broker this knowledge production – writing IRBs, sharing findings with organizational stakeholders, the dissemination of research to multidisciplinary audiences – will be among the topics covered. efaro@montefiore.org (W-35)

FELDMAN, Lindsey (U Memphis) COPAA Department Reflections on Applied Anthropology Training. Applied anthropology is experienced differently in the classroom, in job applications, and ultimately in the realm of professional practice. In this roundtable, five representatives from applied programs will share their pedagogical experiences in applying anthropology across educational and organizational institutions. They will draw on their experiences of in-class field experiences, pairing students with professional mentors, and graduate practicums (all techniques that they use to help bridge the gap between university educations and applied careers), discussing what’s worked and what hasn’t. A subsequent discussion with audience members will focus on identifying transformative approaches that programs can use to help prepare their students for applied careers. lrfldman@memphis.edu (TH-15)

FILE-MURIEL, Maria del Pilar (UNM) Unexpected Turns: Alternative Conceptions of Citizenship in (Trans)National Contexts. We explore the concept of citizenship through the eyes and actions of our interlocutors; looking at the unexpected and (trans)national twists and turns in which citizenship is interpreted, resisting the category itself as previously conceptualized as within the confines of the nation-state. From their differentiated positions and through their practices, our interlocutors are fashioning other ways of citizenship/participation beyond liberal citizenship proposing more fluid notions of citizenship which represent the heteroglossic character of “citizenship-in-practice” mediated through relationships and interactions among people, organizations, and institutions situated at the local, national, and international levels. (TH-93)

FLEURIET, K. Jill (UTSA) Border “Wars” of Words that Matter, Parts I-II. The U.S., and especially Texas, bears obvious prejudice against its southern borderland as evident through policies, financial decisions, and media coverage. The region is increasingly militarized and surveilled. How can anthropologists and other social scientists push back against inaccuracies inhumane policies and legacies of structural violence? In this double panel, we consider how social scientists live, work, and advocate in/for borderland communities. We consider what we have done and what we should do to identify new strategies for advocacy that could apply to other social scientists working in regions under siege from nationalist politics, racist discourse, and ill-informed political decisions. jill.fleuriet@utsa.edu (T-95, T-125)

FOSTER, Brian (U Missouri) and HERCKIS, Lauren (Carnegie Mellon U) Capstone Session on Anthropology of Higher Education. All participants in the cluster of sessions on Anthropology of Higher Education, attendees at the sessions, and others who are interested in an open discussion of the presentations are welcome. The goal is to identify themes, important questions that were raised, and explore topics for future meetings. Discussion will be facilitated by Lauren Herckis and Brian Foster. fosterbl@missouri.edu (S-74)

GERBER, Elaine (Montclair State U) and RUTHERFORD, Dani lyn (Wenner Gren) Audio Description: A Roundtable at the Intersection of Visual Anthropology and Disability Studies. “Audio description” - an accommodation for blind people - could be used more broadly, as a tool of visual anthropology. The use of “image descriptions” has become widespread online, moving beyond disability circles, as people curate their images and focus viewers’ attention on what they should “see” in any particular picture. While Disability Studies has been pioneering “best practices” for description and driving innovation, these strategies have not been embraced by visual anthropologists, nor become central to their work and training. This session addresses that gap, while simultaneously pushing our field to be more inclusive and highlighting anthropology’s contemporary relevance for online images and video. gerbere@montclair.edu (TH-102)

GONZALES, Melissa (UNM) 75 Years of Resource Extraction and Environmental Contamination on Tribal Lands. The West is home to almost half of the US Native American population. These peoples have experienced decades of environmental degradation from natural resource extraction. From 1944 through the Cold War, nearly 30 million tons of ore from 500 mines on the Navajo Nation supplied uranium for US atomic weapons. 75 years on, the communities still live with widespread persistent environmental hazards from slow cleanup of now-abandoned mines. Expanding oil and gas extraction with processes such as fracking, pose new risks and challenges for local communities. We consider damage assessment, remediation, community actions and reactions to environmental degradation. mmonzales@salud.unm.edu (T-33)

GONZALEZ BAUTISTA, Noémie (U Laval) Shifting the Focus: Supporting the Agency and Creativity of Marginalized Groups in Disaster Research. Systemic inequalities under capitalism, colonialism, and patriarchy can deprive people of important relationships, knowledge, traditional lands, and resources. Despite ongoing challenges, many marginalized groups have developed and sustained knowledge and resources to deal with extreme situations. In times of disaster, people experiencing systemic inequalities will likely be identified as “vulnerable” and be deprived of their agency by the application of universal procedures. As disaster researchers and practitioners, how can we support the resources and agency of people undergoing systemic vulnerability? How can we elevate and put greater emphasis on place-based communities’ agency, creativity, and autonomy in the face of disasters? noemie.gonzalez@gmail.com (W-101)

GRAY, Benjamin (U Montana) The Rights and Responsibilities of Environmental Citizenship. Managing natural resources and other environmental concerns is difficult, particularly when multiple stakeholder groups have an interest in policy decisions. Conflict and inequitable outcomes occur with unfortunate frequency. As the world’s burgeoning population confronts the declining availability and quality of natural resources, the ways diverse groups... of people and the state or states in which they reside address natural resource and environmental issues is of paramount concern. This panel will build on this year’s conference theme of cultural citizenship and turn it toward the concept of environmental citizenship. What rights and responsibilities are involved with environmental citizenship? (W-121)

GREEN, Molly (UNCCH) and HUANG, Sarah (Purdue U) Complex Engagement: Challenging Citizenship in Natural Resource and Agricultural Management. This panel looks at how communities make claims to citizenship, or how individuals forge their identities and criteria for belonging, within agricultural production, resource management, and responses to environmental disasters. Drawing from five case studies in Latin America and Asia, we broadly analyze the mobilizations of local communities and their approaches to claiming citizenship rights and challenging globalization in the struggle for environmental justice. Our papers analyze the encounters—and resulting tensions, struggles, or collaborations—between governing bodies and communities as they address environmental concerns and as place-based communities center diversified environmental livelihood approaches in their claims to citizenship. megreen@live.unc.edu (TH-32)

GREENWALD, Randee (NMSU) and BREA, Karen Lucas (U Hartford) Community Response to Asylum-Seekers: Anthropology and Rights at the New Mexican Border. Border communities, some of the poorest in New Mexico, saw an exponential rise in families seeking asylum, coming from Central America in the past two years. In a humanitarian response, these communities provided hospitality and medical care to asylum-seekers transiting through the area. What is the role of applied anthropology in the context of human rights for those caught in changing border policies? Round table participants are locals who live and advocate for the rights of those on both sides of the border. Engaging the public in grassroots action and promoting border community response is central to this session. ragreenw@nmsu.edu (T-34)

GREENWOOD, Kim (NPS), LEONG, Kirsten (NOAA PIFSC), WISE, Sarah (NOAA AFSC), and HOELTING, Kristin (CO State U) What Is the Role of Western Social Science in Embracing Tribal and Other Knowledge for Federal Resource Management? Part II: Where Can We Go? Following Part 1 of this series, this panel will explore with the audience native perspectives on understanding and valuing diverse knowledge systems in Federal resource management. Federal agencies increasingly seek to incorporate multiple knowledge systems (e.g., local, traditional, or indigenous) to complement western natural science in resource management. Yet western anthropological methods are advocated for learning about and including these other knowledge systems. Is this hypocritical? Or is social science a necessary bridge? What other barriers or bridges exist to embracing multiple knowledge systems, and what are crucial next steps to improve inclusivity in management? kristin.hoelting@colostate.edu (T-128)

GROENFELDT, David (Water-Culture Inst) Protecting Native Waters. Native communities in the American Southwest are confronting ever evolving threats to their water sovereignty. New river diversions, copper mines, and yet more oil and gas extraction are in the works, and a new generation of uranium mines is being proposed. Though the system is rigged, activists are finding new ways of protecting their traditional waters, ranging from direct action (e.g., Standing Rock), awareness raising, legal strategies, and alliance-building. In this panel discussion, Native activists and allies will present their work as water protectors and discuss what challenges and opportunities they see for protecting and restoring their traditional waters. dgroenfeldt@waterculture.org (T-93)

HALL-ARBER, Madeleine (MIT Sea Grant, retired), GRIFFITH, David (EUC), and CONWAY, Flaxen (OR State U, Sea Grant) Labor and Immigration in US Fishing Communities. Immigrants gravitated to fishing and seafood processing as a first step to making their way in a new country. In this session, we will be considering the waves of immigration to different regions of the US, what attracted them, and how they have been integrated or not into a community, settled or moved on. We will be exploring what role institutions, markets, and/or politics have played in this process. Finally, we will discuss with attendees how information about immigrants in fishing communities could engage the general public in current immigration debates, clearing up misconceptions and, hopefully, engendering empathy. arber@mit.edu (W-127)

HAWVERMALE, Erica (UNT) Client Based Praxis: Using Anthropological Methods and Theory to Address Organizational Needs. Anthropologists are increasingly employed outside of academia. In this sector, some work on client-based projects, where their client organizations determine the research questions, and where the output of the research is in a format that can be best utilized by the client. Each of the authors in this session conducted research for an organizational partner in a client-based relationship. Some of the clients were non-profits, some were community groups, and some were for-profit entities. In each case, the anthropologist addressed a research question that their client needed answered and presented their findings as a “deliverable” for their client. erica.hawvermale@unt.edu (F-04)

HENDERSON, Heather and WILSON, Jason (USF) At the Intersection of Anthropology and Medicine: Towards a New Clinically Applied Anthropology. The field of biomedicine is ripe for incorporating anthropological collaboration. This roundtable discussion demonstrates how medical anthropology is currently being utilized by a variety of professionals in varied ways to solve problems that are affecting patient outcomes and quality of care in clinical settings. From pressing matters such as cancer, substance use disorders, and patient satisfaction, all the way to utilizing education to teach pre-medical students about effective ways to incorporate social determinants of health into their future clinical practice, we hope to in this session illuminate the multifaceted ways that you can apply anthropology to traditionally clinical concerns. heather42@mail.usf.edu (W-68)

HESSLER, Richard (U Missouri Emeritus) P.K. New Award Presentation. Following the awards presentations, several former recipients will address what the award has meant to them, personally, and career-wise. A moderator will help focus discussion on the implications for research, teaching, and SFAA. (TH-100)

HEUER, Jacquelyn and BRADLEY, Sarah (USF) Engaging Applied Research in Community Food Movements. This roundtable will explore how researchers can contribute to community food movements by working with community partners and institutions. In doing so, participants will engage with issues such as conducting evaluations for community programs, building lasting partnerships between community food movements and institutions, informing food policy, and disseminating research in impactful ways. Drawing on a diversity of applied food systems research, we will consider questions such as: How can participatory methods be used to support community food movements? How can researchers help navigate the implicit power dynamics among movement stakeholders? How can researchers help grow community power in food movements? heuerj@mail.usf.edu (W-91)

HEYMAN, Josiah (UTEP) Political Ecology, Political Economy, and Applied Anthropology: Honoring James Greenberg. James (Jim) Greenberg has been remarkably creative over many decades, with a notable role in establishing the field of political ecology, and also offering important work on indigenous Mexicans, funds of knowledge, networks of reciprocity, capital, and credit systems. His fieldwork includes indigenous Oaxaca, the U.S.-Mexico border, and Mexican-origin peoples of greater Southwest North America. We come together with Jim to recognize his remarkable presence and creativity over more than four decades. jnheyman@utep.edu (F-43)

HITCHCOCK, Robert (UNM) and BIESELE, Megan (Kalahari Peoples Fund) Voices from the Communities: Interactions and Collaborations among Indigenous People, Anthropologists, and Educators, Parts I-II. Indigenous people in southern Africa and other parts of the world have faced discrimination, marginalization, and dispossession of their lands and resources.
Non-government organizations and community-based organizations have been collaborating in promoting human rights and equitable development in southern Africa for nearly 50 years. Drawing on experiences of NGOs, CBOs, and researchers, this symposium will examine efforts to listen to the voices of indigenous people and to come up with strategies that meet their needs and help to negotiate their rights in the face of challenges from state governments, international agencies, and the private sector. hitichi.16@msu.edu (F-02, F-32)

HOELTING, Kristin (CO State U), WISE, Sarah (NOAA AFSC), and LEONG, Kirsten (NOAA PIFSC) The Role of Diverse Knowledge Systems and Plural Values in Federal Resource Management, Part I: Where We Have Been. This session explores ways multiple knowledge systems can meaningfully inform Federal decision making processes. Federal managers and collaborators are in need of methods, tools, and processes that create space for knowledges arising from multiple human-nature relationships and understandings of well-being, Knowledge systems such as local, traditional, or indigenous knowledge can improve resource managers’ understandings of socio-ecological processes, as well as ecosystems’ contributions to human well-being. The papers in this session explore pathways toward broader and meaningful consideration of diverse knowledge systems within federal decision-making, with the aim to expand existing approaches and identify opportunities. kristin.hoelting@colostate.edu (T-98)

HOLBROOK, Emily (USF) Issues for Refugee Resettling in the US. This panel discusses issues with refugee resettlement in the US including the unique issues for refugees from the Congo Wars, education policy, accessing and utilizing food benefits, and reproductive healthcare. This panel will also address applied projects focusing on some of these issues including the creation of ESOL materials and Oral History projects. The authors are all engaged in applied work with diverse refugee communities across West Central Florida. euholbrook@mail.usf.edu (W-94)

HOUSE, Kendall (Boise State U) and MILLER, Christine (Savannah Coll of Art & Design) Emerging Developments: Anthropology, Design, and the UX Space. The relationship between design and anthropology is growing, multifaceted, and dynamic, driven in part by new digital technologies. This session explores the complex intersection between anthropology, design, and the UX space where collaborative practice is transforming both design and anthropology. Anthropologists are increasingly branding their work as UX research, adding greater flexibility and fluidity. How do professionals working at this confluence position their expertise? What kind of work do they do? How does the practice of anthropology in this space transform design and applied anthropology? khouse@boisestate.edu (W-103)

HUME, Douglas (NKU) and CARSON, Sarah (U Penn) Ethnographic Field and Data Analysis Methods: One-on-one Mentoring. The Society for Anthropological Sciences has assembled ethnographic methods experts to answer questions one-on-one about the following research methods: cultural consensus, cultural consonance, corpus-driven ethnography, elicitation by frame, free-listing, interviewing, lexical analysis, pile sorting, social network analysis, survey methods, and symbolic projective tasks. To familiarize attendees with their realms of expertise before the annual meeting, each expert participant has posted materials (videos, manuscripts, and presentations) demonstrating how they have applied their methodology within the context of a case study on the Society for Anthropological Sciences website: sas.anthroniche.com/mentoring-event-materials/. dwhume@gmail.com (S-39)

HUME, Douglas (NKU) Sugar Cane Farming Community Development: Findings of the 2019 Ethnographic Field School in Belize. This round table is a forum for discussion of the findings from the Ethnographic Field School in Belize during which students conducted ethnographic interviews within sugar cane farming communities in Northern Belize. In collaboration with community partners, ethnosemantic data were collected on child education and labor, health and traditional medicine, Fairtrade, climate change, and social networks of farming knowledge. Data were analyzed using attribute, consensus, and network analyses. The discussion of results will focus on how the current data may aid local community development initiatives and the focus of community-based research during the next field season. dwhume@gmail.com (F-91)

JENKS, Angela (UCI) Building Teaching Communities. Teaching is a significant aspect of applied anthropological work, but it often occurs in isolation. Many instructors face teaching challenges and develop teaching strategies on their own, and there are few opportunities to learn from our colleagues’ experiences. This roundtable discussion will examine current efforts to build communities of instructors within and across institutions and brainstorm new ways to strengthen relationships among anthropology instructors and support collaboration and exchange. Panelists will discuss projects such as faculty learning communities, informal organizing, and online networks, as well as the role of professional organizations, publications, and conferences. (W-105)

JINKA RAMAMURTHY, Malavika (MS State U) Realizing Global Citizenship: Interactions of Ethnicities, Citizenship, and Cultural Identities in Diverse Societies, a COPAA Student Session. The recent times are witnessing a rise in human displacement due to internal conflict, natural disasters, biodiversity conservation, or economic development in the homelands. While human displacement makes host societies diverse, applied anthropology has been recognizing the adaptabilities of the displaced people or refugees to the cultures and people of the new lands, the possibilities and challenges for different cultural identities to co-exist, and the tradeoffs that world leaders have been negotiating in making societies an arena of mutual tolerance. Our session discusses the various interactions of citizenship, ethnic identities, minority rights, and cultural values in diverse societies. mj1428@msstate.edu (TH-123)

JOHNSON, Teresa (U Maine) Extending Citizenship and Engaging Diverse Disciplines and Perspectives to Enhance Resilience in Marine Social-Ecological Systems, Parts I-II. Enhancing community resilience in the face of social, cultural, economic, political, and environmental change requires embracing the complexity and uncertainty inherent within marine social-ecological systems. This requires advocating for the inclusion of diverse perspectives and extending citizenship in policy discussions and research to new and/or marginalized perspectives and other disciplines. Marine applied social scientists are well positioned to do this kind of transdisciplinary work through their engaged scholarship with diverse stakeholders. This session will illustrate research and engagement efforts aimed to better integrate diverse disciplines and stakeholder perspectives to support decision-making about complex issues facing marine social-ecological systems. teresa.johnson@maine.edu (F-07, F-37)

JONES, Eric (UTH TMC) Examining Resilience in Disasters: Resistance, Adaptation, Transformation. Papers in this panel address how a group of people faces a hazard and its potentially disastrous consequences and comes out the other side resisting, adapting to, or being transformed by the extreme event(s). By looking at wellbeing, population, and longevity norms of social organization over centuries, decades, or a few years, these studies advance conceptual refinement of the resilience concept as applied to hazards and disasters. Such refinement permits greater attention to mechanisms and thus more targeted applications in disaster mitigation, preparation and recovery through policies and programs. eric.c.jones@uth.tmc.edu (F-31)

JONES, Rose (Perot Museum of Nature & Sci) and CARRINGTON, Jara (UNT) The Lone Anthropologist Syndrome: Reclaiming Applied Anthropology in the Workplace and University. Drawing upon the roles and experiences that a diverse team of anthropologists, applied and academic, mentees and mentored, archeologists and ethnographers, had as they collaborated on an exhibit, “Origins: Fossils from the Cradle of Humankind,” recently curated by The Perot Museum of Nature and Science in Dallas, Texas, session participants will address how anthropology informed and guided their respective roles for the exhibit. Session participants will also address the ways in which anthropology was muted or highlighted in their respective roles, focusing on the implications the Lone Anthropologist Syndrome poses for applied anthropology and its practitioners in today’s job market. rose.jones@perotmuseum.org (F-05)
 Session Abstracts

KABEL, Allison (Towson U) and PAUL-WARD, Amy (FIU) Navigating Conflicting Demands and Contested Citizenship in Higher Education throughout the Life Course and across the Disability Spectrum. Applied anthropologists, like other professionals working in higher education settings, increasingly face conflicting demands from our constituencies. The emergence of these conflicting demands is particularly salient when working to support students living with disabilities, impairments, chronic conditions and various challenges in the face of policies, practices and guidelines ill equipped to serve this population. We will explore the accessibility of study abroad programs, challenges and opportunities for students with developmental disabilities participating in post-secondary transition programs, policy considerations and other issues that cause our students to question their sense of belonging in our institutions of higher education. akabel@towson.edu (TH-132)

KADONO, Mika (USF) Applying Anthropology to Vaccine Hesitancy: Current Themes, Policies, and Implications. There has been a steady, global rise in vaccine-preventable disease outbreaks due, in part, to increasing vaccine hesitancy. Vaccine hesitancy (VH), or the delay or refusal of vaccines despite their availability, is a complex phenomenon shaped by overlapping socio-cultural, political, and economic factors. In this paper session, we discuss anthropological themes of the current iteration of VH; application and role of anthropology in addressing VH; vaccine policy; and, public health and global health implications. mkadono@mail.usf.edu (TH-38)

KASNITZ, Devva (CUNY/SDS) and WANGEMAN, Matthew (NAU) Accommodating Research on Communication Disability. “Disability is an ingenuous way to live” says playwright Neil Marcus. Ethnography and autoethnography are ways of capturing ingenious living. We prep our students to look broadly and deeply. Recent trends in online research offer access to thousands of unmet respondents. Is this anonymity itself a barrier to participation? Where do the ethics of representation come in? When was the last time you wrote to researcher, supervisor, or IRB to say that the research is inherently flawed because it is inaccessible? Brainstorm with us how to teach disability research to this troubling trend where medium silences message. sdsksasnitz@gmail.com (TH-42)

KASNITZ, Devva (SDS) and WOOIAK, Joanne (U Washington) Society for Disability Studies President’s Town Hall: With many Directors of SDS from anthropology, we have found a place in applied anthropology. Last year we co-sponsored seven events with 34 presentations. For this year, 2020 we expect a 50% increase. This event will start with a very brief meeting about SDS and the logistics of our partnership with SfAA. Then we want to talk about future plans and themes for 2021. With memberships overlapping not only with SfAA but with the Disability Research Interest Group of the Society for Medical Anthropology and groups on aging, we want to share resources and research agendas. sdsksasnitz@gmail.com (TH-162)

KELLEY, Shawn (Parametrix) and BUNCH, Fred (NPS) Traditional Use and Collaborative Research at Great Sand Dunes National Park and Preserve. Great Sand Dunes National Park and Preserve (GRSA) located in southern Colorado, preserves the tallest sand dunes in North America, as well as creeks, wetlands, grasslands, ponderosa forests, and alpine tundra. In order to better understand Native American connections to GRSA the National Park Service contracted a Traditional Use Study. Native Americans representatives from ten tribes (currently in Colorado, New Mexico, Utah and Arizona) worked together with anthropologists and other scientists on a collaborative research project to better understand the resources and connections Native American communities have with GRSA. This informs GRSA’s management, interpretation and helps preserve this information for future generations. skelley@parametrix.com (T-67)

KING, Samantha (UNCCH) Households and Landscapes: Exploring the Social and Ecological Dynamics of Agrarian Change, Part I. Over the last several decades, farmers have encountered increasingly unstable dynamics of global economic and environmental change. To understand the impacts of such global challenges on agrarian ecologies, anthropological analyses typically investigate the social and ecological dimensions of households. Yet broader spatial and temporal processes of landscapes are also significant. In an effort to integrate such concerns regarding scale, papers on this panel present innovative ethnographic research that utilizes interdisciplinary perspectives from landscape ecology and geo-computational techniques (such as remote sensing, GIS, and spatial analysis) to enhance our understanding of the complexity of agrarian change. skk@unc.edu (F-103)

KING, Samantha (UNCCH) Inside the Black Box: Considerations and Concerns When Studying Rural Households, Part II. Today, the household is widely considered the primary unit of analysis for understanding rural livelihoods, yet it remains a problematic concept in both social theory and empirical research. Intractable assumptions of households as cohesive units of (re)production and consumption often mask the diversity of intrahousehold practices and the social relations that structure rural life. Still, venturing inside this ‘black box’ presents its own set of challenges. This roundtable will offer a venue for discussing the methodological and analytical quandaries that arise when studying rural households. Panelists will raise key issues and discuss techniques they have utilized to address these concerns. skk@unc.edu (F-133)

KLINO, Nolan (Rollins Coll) Constructing Cultural Citizenship and Belonging: Immigration Politics in the US on National and Local Levels. Anti-immigrant politics and nativist rhetoric were central components of the 2016 Trump campaign and continue to be a priority for the Trump administration. The growth of xenophobic and nationalist policies under this administration has served as a call to action for anthropologists who work with immigrant communities across the country. In this roundtable, we discuss US immigration politics and place them into conversation with our local immigration research, teaching, and activism. Focusing on a diversity of sites, including Colorado, Florida, Maryland and Oregon, we consider the commonalities and particularities of our research and propose new areas for research and action. nkline@rollins.edu (W-63)

LEVIN, Betty Wolder (CUNY SPH) Seeking, Finding, Accepting and Resisting Care: Structural and Cultural Diversity in Complex Societies. This session, sponsored by the Dying and Bereavement Interest Group of the Society for Medical Anthropology, will examine issues related to care and support – medical and social, professional and personal – for people who are dying, ill or impaired. Five anthropologists will start by describing their observations based on work in a variety of settings including homes and communities, religious institutions, hospitals, nursing homes and hospices. We then look forward to a lively discussion, informed by anthropological perspectives, among panelists and audience members about peoples’ willingness and ability to seek, find, accept or resist care and support. betty.levin@sph.cuny.edu (TH-03)

LINN, Colleen, O’LEARY, Brendan, and AKEMANN, Camille (Wayne State U) Exploring Best Practices in Urban Interdisciplinary Research. In interdisciplinary research groups, anthropologists are often positioned between marginalized communities and the agencies or academic groups that hired them. Such collaborations include anthropologists and lab scientists, communities, and non-profits. These relationships demonstrate the importance of establishing a sustainable methodology in applied anthropology. However, common challenges arise during these efforts, including work style differences, end goals, and a lack of rubric for best interdisciplinary research practices. This roundtable will be hosted by an interdisciplinary research team from Wayne State University (Detroit, MI), and explore questions related to the challenges of doing interdisciplinary work and navigating best practices for meaningful collaboration. fe1165@wayne.edu (TH-45)

LITTLE, Peter C. (RIC) and CAMPBELL, Jacob (Field Museum) Political Ecology, Intersectional Alliances, and Navigating the Just Transition, Parts I-II. Exploring recent anthropological and political-ecological engagements with urban environments, conservation and land management regimes, and climate change, this panel aims to bring applied anthropology into conversation with “just transition” theory and practice. Emerging from labor unions and MANDACHE, Luminita-Anda and AUSTIN, Diane (U Arizona) COPPA- Applied Anthropology and Student Engagement: A Case Study Based on the Internship Program at the Bureau of Applied Research in Anthropology (BARA), University of Arizona. In response to research documenting the long-term positive impacts of experiential learning to implement engaged learning experiences, this round table discusses the BARA Internship program. The program combines skills workshops, seminar-style discussions, and hands-on experience on small research teams working with community collaborators to address local concerns. The roundtable brings together the current internship program coordinator, undergraduate and post-baccalaureate interns, graduate research assistants, students, former interns, and graduate student mentors to discuss the internship program’s challenges and successes in 1) extending the practice of applied anthropology, and 2) equipping students with experiences complementing university education. lmandache@email.arizona.edu (W-74)

MCCABE, Maryann (U Rochester) and DENNY, Rita (EPIC) Thinking through Diversity in Industry Practices: Implications for Business Anthropology. This roundtable explores ethnographic practices among anthropologists working in business and addresses how we represent different groups of people in plural societies when collaborating with clients and organizations. We aim to examine our roles and engage in critical reflection on problematizing consumers in research projects. Issues for discussion include how design frames ‘user,’ consumer research constructs ‘target segments,’ and clients define customers or employees in a way that diminishes citizenship in complex systems. More generally, we consider how to counter flow toward a notion of consumers as sovereign individuals rather than persons with identities embedded in social networks and discourses. mm@cultureconnes.com (W-135)

MCCHESNEY, Lea (UNM) Recovering a History of Community Collaboration: Honoring the Legacy of MariLyn Salvador. In this post-NAGPRA era, the canon of museum-community collaboration is central to museum collections work and public programming. Yet MariLyn Salvador’s leadership remains largely unrecognized, notably her efforts in founding the collaboration prototype, UNM’s Alfonso Ortiz Center for Intercultural Studies. This roundtable recovers her legacy in the historical record. Sharing subtle and overt contributions of her mentorship to careers in academia, communities, the culinary industry, and museums, speakers will facilitate a conversation exploring insights her leadership can provide for the future of collaborative work. The session includes the screening of a 7-minute video clip, “MariLyn Salvador in her own words.” lsmcches@unm.edu (F-36)

MCCHESNEY, Lea (UNM) The Materiality of Citizenship in Pueblo Worlds: Di Wac Powa and Tsaaqpata Sinom Projects to Return Cultural Heritage. Recent community collaborations address both cultural concerns and access to legacy collections in museums distant from communities. Two examples reveal different approaches. The National Museum of the American Indian’s collaborative loan program returned 100 pots to the Northern Tewa peoples’ Poeh Center last October, while the Smithsonian’s Recovering Voices Program collaborates with the Hopi Cultural Preservation Office and UNM’s Alfonso Ortiz Center connecting potters to collections at NMNH through group visits. Participants in these long-term, large-scale projects share insights from institutional and community perspectives in conversation with the audience to address the significance and future of such endeavors. lsmcches@unm.edu (T-68)

MCDONALD, James (U Montevallo) and SULLIVAN, Kathleen (CSULA) Toxic Citizenship. Poor communities and people often face the greatest danger from environmental hazards. The precarity of these communities also makes them least likely to effectively challenge, let alone litigate, these threats and risks. The damage that is done is often irreversible. This session explores cases in which communities -commonly rural, poor, and with a majority of people of color- in the U.S. have been subjected to a kind of environmental apartheid. It allows for the interrogation of linkages between environmental injustice and citizenship as they play out in a country with a liberal-democratic ethos, but whose practices are far from it. jmcdonald@montevallo.edu (F-34)

MCGUIRE, Joseph (U Alabama) Millennial Bodies: Exploring the Sociocultural and Political-Economic Realities (Re)Shaping a Generation. Framed using Schepers-Hughes and Lock’s ‘Three Bodies’ (1987), this session explores how generational changes in sociocultural and political-economic landscapes become embedded and expressed on Individual, Social, and Political bodies, broadly construed. Presented works center on the negotiations that millennial bodies (b. 1981-1996) enact as they exist at the nexus of traditional expectations and current realities. Our session seeks to demonstrate the unique ways that millennial bodies manifest reinterpretations of health, illness, anticipated life-course, and national identity among others in both psyche and soma at the individual and community level. Our discussion investigates these contemporary issues cross-culturally and in historical context. idmcguire2@crimson.ua.edu (F-99)

MERKEL, Richard (U Virginia) Negotiating Culture in the Rural Opioid Crisis. Medical anthropology highlights conflicts between and efforts to combine biomedicine and local health ways. Works that describe the process of negotiation and compromise between biomedical and local approaches are less discussed. What are the processes of negotiation and compromise that occur as these forms of knowledge and power interact? What ethical dilemmas arise during the course of these negotiations? This session examines the ways that diverse rural healthcare stakeholders challenge institutional procedures through their efforts to provide substance abuse care; provoke and address emotional reactions - anxiety, mistrust, hurt, and anger - naming the assumptions of particular cultural contexts. rlmsu@virginia.edu (TH-124)

MESSER, Ellen (Tufts U) Human Rights: Advancing a Framework to Support Cultural Difference as a Social Process. This panel, drawing participation from drafters of the 1999 AAA Statement on Human Rights, offers an opportunity for moderated discussion around changing perspectives and circumstances. Topics include: 1) clarifying the circumstances where human rights go “beyond” legal and political dimensions, to expand the concept; 2) describing cases where human rights conflict with humanitarian norms and strategies for negotiating rights in conflict; 3) reference points for negotiating arguments over universalism and cultural relativism; and 4) showing how conceptual language of decolonization, history of oppression, structural violence, and “cultural difference as a social process” can advance human rights in practice. ellen.messer@tufts.edu (W-32)

MONTTHEITH, Daniel (U Alaska SE) Indigenous Knowledge in Community Anthropology Projects in Southeast Alaska. The panelists are anthropologists working with communities on a variety of projects in Southeast Alaska to integrate indigenous knowledge in contemporary settings. Projects discussed will involve programs and agencies pertaining to medical and health issues, subsistence activities and laws, and education. dbmonteith@alaska.edu (W-134)
MOOLENAR, Elisabeth (Regis U) Sharing Ideas & Joining Forces: Connections, Intersections, and Collaborations among Extraction & Environment, Risk & Disaster, and PESO. Following our inaugural and successful multi-TIG/PESO roundtable in 2019, this year’s roundtable seeks to further stimulate connections, intersections, and fruitful collaborations. Leading an open discussion with attendees involving flash presentations, a panel of representatives from the interest groups and PESO will share highlights from their interest groups at the 2020 meeting and explore new ideas and common threads. Additionally, panelists and attendees will consider the intersections of their research (and other work) and its applications for the environment, human rights, and social justice. The roundtable will be followed by open discussion and networking. emoolenaar@regis.edu (F-126)

NORRIS, Susan (Immaculata U) Care and Diversity in Complex Societies, Part I. This session seeks to answer questions regarding health care delivery in diverse settings. What coping mechanisms do individuals employ in dealing with their health issues? What socio-political, historical and economic circumstances lead or contribute to the health burdens experienced by vulnerable groups? How do indigenous communities defend their interests, cultural and otherwise? This session draws on experiences of nurses and other health care professionals in providing care to various populations in our complex, globalized world. Training the next generation of health care professionals and use of social networks among health professionals are also discussed. (W-98)

O’BRIEN, Michael (TAMUSA) Open Discussion of Three Sessions on Conflicting Interests and Expectations of Higher Education Constituencies. The three sessions on conflicting interests and demands of higher education constituencies raise an extremely broad range of issues. This discussion, which will engage all attendees, examines the range of issues covered in the three sessions, discusses similarities and differences in how these different dynamics play out, and identifies related issues that have not been raised in the three sessions. The question of whether this discussion should be taken further in future meetings will be addressed, and recommendations will be forwarded to the TIG Advisory Board. (F-104)

ORTIZ, Cristina (UMN-Morris) Fly Over Anthropology. Although the assumption has often been that the ideal spaces to consider culturally diverse and marginalized populations in complex, stratified societies are urban and suburban contexts, anthropologists in rural U.S. communities are uniquely positioned to see such issues play out in the lives of rural residents. This panel gathers scholars of and from rural spaces to share insights about how rural people confront issues like health, climate change, gender & sexuality, immigration, and shifting strategies of agricultural production. This panel seeks not only to theorize rural anthropology but also to highlight the scholarship by and about historically underrepresented groups. cortiz@morris.umn.edu (F-94)

PETILLO, April (KSU) and MORA, Amalia C. (ASU) Terraforming Research Spaces: Building University-Grounded Gender-Based Violence Initiatives. The past several years have provided much fodder for gender-based violence public scholarship. Sexual predators operating from upper political/economic echelons and the challenges to effective, innovative interventions that we’ve seen are not new, but the public demand for answers seems different. Can we terraform universities—with budget, student-consumer and local political concerns—into friendly gendered-violence research spaces that meet the current public demand? What do university-based research consortia/institutes offer that is different? This moderated conversation considers the role of the university-grounded research initiative and its potential impact for creating more diverse study of gender, violence and culture within applied anthropology. apetillo@ksu.edu, amaliacmora@email.arizona.edu (F-09)

PETILLO, April (KSU) Embodied & Entangled: Methodology at the Intersectional Crossroads of Interpersonal, Gendered Violences. Despite decades of research, the prevalence of sexual violence remains high. How might we reconceptualize employment of feminist methodology to better disentangle interpersonal, gendered violence? We are developing an edited collection reconceptualizing our use of feminist methodology in this political moment. Blending theory, evidence-based observations and empirical study, we’ll consider the work of reflective methodology that recognizes (institutional) intersectionality in our research, how this approach might inform a new and/or adaptive form of feminist methodological praxis, the impact(s) for knowledge producers and recipients who might be personally impacted by the insight gained and related emergent practices. apetillo@ksu.edu (W-129)

PFISTER, Anne E. (UNF) and EVERSON, Courtney (CO State U) Contested Cultural Citizenship and Family Inclusion: Insights from the Field. Fluid concepts of family organization, and movement of families within dynamic socio-political structures, are important in envisioning services aimed at children and families (Bomar, 2004; Cowan et al., 2014; Vindrola-Padros et al., 2015). This session brings together applied researchers interested in how families and children negotiate nuanced layers of diversity and contested cultural citizenship that shape their experiences of learning, belongingness, and identity formation. Our discussion focuses on the richness of interdisciplinary frameworks for exploring cross-generational, multi-sited research and facilitating applied impacts aimed at improving a variety of supports for families and children. (F-102)

PHANEUF, Victoria (BOEM) and MCMAHAN, Ben (U Arizona) Petroleum, Fish, and Community: Papers from the Central and Eastern Gulf of Mexico Coast. Coastal communities in the central and eastern Gulf of Mexico have longstanding connections to fishing and offshore oil and gas. Our panel investigates the nuance and diversity of relationships between communities and extractive industries, focusing on: definitions and responses to social vulnerability; mobility, migration, and their drivers; disaster recovery and landscape change in social and environmental context; and the decision making, planning and governance that affect community sustainability. We interrogate connections between bureaucracies, governmental and non-governmental services, economic volatility, and trends in extractive industries to demonstrate the complex interplay between these forces, including impacts on residents and communities. victoria.phaneuf@boem.gov (TH-07)

PLESHET, Noah (U Arizona) Landscapes of Transformation, Cultures of Belonging: Political Ecologies of Infrastructure, Extraction, and Climate Change. Drawing on political ecological frameworks and categories, this panel examines the articulated cultural and ecological implications of anthropogenic environmental effects, from questions of global climate and ecosystems, to infrastructure developments, to resource extraction. Environmental anthropologies of transformation have recently advanced a range of visions of the socioecological futures, of human and nonhuman worlds (Eschbar 2018; Tsing 2017). Given these visions, how have local communities struggled to reconstitute hope, livelihood, cultural connection, and belonging in landscapes disturbed or disrupted? What then is the role of environmental anthropology and political ecology in understanding and living with transformation, from local to global scales? (TH-103)

RE CRUZ, Alicia (UNT) The Border Experience as Anthropological Praxis in Transformative Pedagogy. In this roundtable participants will reflect on the “praxis” of an experiential learning class. The course included a week-long Border Awareness Experience (BAE) at Annunciation House, located a few blocks from the US/ Mexico border. Annunciation is a temporary home and sanctuary for refugees and migrant poor. The second part of the course was on campus and it included interactions with scholars, activists and NGOs representatives in the area of immigration policy, asylum, and advocacy. The discussion among participants in this round table will focus on a sentipensante pedagogy and anthropological praxis when the rights of migrants are violated and their lives are rendered disposable. REID, Jessica (UTSA) and BUNKLEY, Emma (U Arizona) Care, Bodies, and Practices. The definition of care/caregiving across the literature has constantly been in flux, ranging from everyday practices to engagements with larger cultural systems, such as biomedicine (Buch 2015). With different approaches, conceptions, and interpretations, care is foundational to health and disease/illness/sickness navigation and recovery (Mol et al. 2010). This panel invites an exploration of varying attitudes, cultural interpretations, approaches to, and theories of care. Whose bodies are [worth] cared for? What practices of care are deemed appropriate for certain illnesses/diseases? What ways should Medical Anthropology re/interpreting notions of care? jessmariereid@gmail.com (F-08)

RODRIGUEZ, Cheryl (USF) Theorizing the Complexities of Black Communities: Race, Culture and Citizenship. Anthropological studies of Black people’s relationships to place and space include explorations of community histories, the impact of race on shifts and transitions in communities, attention to such issues as gentrification and displacement; and examinations of the ways that people navigate the constraints of racialized communities. This panel considers Black anthropologists’ long-term relationships with Black community research and our understandings of culture and citizenship as contested concepts in Black life. We also attend to critical questions about how we make anthropology meaningful and relevant to the people who share their own theoretical perspectives about the places and spaces they call neighborhood and home. cdriguez@usf.edu (TH-122)

ROZEN, David (Independent) Disease and Its Discontents: Medical Anthropology on the Front Lines. The emergence of poor health issues among a variety of groups or societies in various parts of the world is the subject of this session. The central theme is the intersection of parochial approaches to health promotion and the biomedical systems that oppose those approaches. From Hassidic Jewish to Amish children, and from Nigerian to West African adults, the panel will discuss conflicts between local ideas of appropriate health practices and professional autonomy in presenting solutions to health crises. The examples given in this session illustrate different unique cultures, inhabiting ecological, ethnic, economic, and political systems, some in crisis. djrozen2@gmail.com (F-38)

RUTH, Alissa and STURTZSREETHANAN, Cindi (ASU) Engaging Everyday Citizens in the Research Process. Scientists have long grappled with how to communicate scientific findings as well as engage the public in research. Anthropologists, with community-oriented research interests and various ethnographic methods, are positioned uniquely to address these issues by including everyday citizens in the research process. This session will address how anthropologists are creating opportunities for individuals and communities/ community-based organizations to be part of the academic community and the research process – including, but not limited to, conceptualization, data collection and analysis – in order to demonstrate what types of projects are possible and provide best practices to incorporate successfully the lay community. alissa.ruth@asu.edu (W-95)

SAAD, Summar (Wayne State U) SAS Student Panel. In this panel, graduate students explore how anthropological theory and methods can illuminate diverse contemporary issues. Following the conference theme, panelists consider the contributions of anthropology to address a range of cultural challenges including the impact of natural disasters, end-of-life issues, women in politics, and innovative design methods. Anthropologists, with community-oriented research interests and various ethnographic methods, are positioned uniquely to address these issues by including everyday citizens in the research process. This session will address how anthropologists are creating opportunities for individuals and communities/ community-based organizations to be part of the academic community and the research process – including, but not limited to, conceptualization, data collection and analysis – in order to demonstrate what types of projects are possible and provide best practices to incorporate successfully the lay community. ay7791@wayne.edu (TH-94)

SAKELLARIOU, Dikaios (Cardiff U) and WARREN, Narelle (Monash U) Intersectional Approaches to Disability: Convergences and Breaks, Part I. Research agendas, care practices, and national policies often foreground disability as an exclusive identity, positioning it as a category apart. This panel seeks to question the assumption of disability as a category apart, by specifically attending to the ways it intersects with gender, race, poverty, sexual and gender identities, illness, and age, among several other dimensions. Papers in this panel seek to ask: how does structural disadvantage emerge at the intersections of disability with other social constructs and environments, and what are the convergences and the breaches between the various ways to conceptualise and engage with disability and other identity-based politics? sakellarioud@cardiff.ac.uk (F-12)

SCHELHAS, John (USFS) and HITCHNER, Sarah (UGA) Strong Legacies, Murky Titles: Anthropological and Legal Approaches to Understanding Heirs’ Property, Forestry, and Agriculture in the U.S. South. Heirs’ property—inherit land passed on intestate, without clear title, typically to family members—is a complex property issue that continues to have profound implications for many families and communities in the southeastern United States. While the land has great cultural, symbolic, and sentimental importance to families, the murky ownership status has impeded agriculture, forestry, and wealth development. This session brings together experts in social science and law to explore the scope and nature of the heirs’ property problem, the ongoing challenges faced by heirs’ property owners, and community-based and legal contributions to addressing the issue. john.schelhas@usda.gov (F-13)

SCHULLER, Mark (NIU) Citizenship in Times of Crisis: Rural Communities’ Perceptions of the State in Post-Disaster Haiti. Formal citizenship has many meanings, including exclusion. Its meanings hinge on understandings of the state, particularly precarious for rural Haitian communities following a large-scale catastrophe, Hurricane Matthew in 2016. The disaster was the stage for the election of Haiti’s current president, who is facing increasing challenges to his legitimacy. The country has been gripped by large-scale protests, which occasionally engulfed the provinces, since 2018. Even before the current cascade of disasters, rural communities were rendered andeyò, literally “outside.” Based on mixed-method, multi-year collaborative research, this panel aims to disentangle multiple meanings of citizenship and exclusion, centering perspectives of local communities. mschuller@niu.edu (F-121)

SCOTT, Mary Alice (NMSU) and PAGE-REEVES, Janet (UNM) Working towards Health Equity: A Roundtable Discussion with Health and Healthcare-Focused Applied and Practicing Anthropologists. Applied and practicing anthropologists in New Mexico and West Texas have established innovative partnerships with multiple stakeholders concerned about healthcare and health equity in the region. This session focuses on how anthropologists who work in these arenas apply their holistic perspectives to address health disparities in the state and emphasizes practices that may translate to other contexts. Specific topics that will be addressed in this session include collaboration with underrepresented communities, development of clinical tools that assist health care professionals in addressing social needs, and integrating anthropological perspectives into graduate medical education. mscott@nmsu.edu (T-91)

SEARA, Tarsila (U New Haven) and POLLNAC, Richard (URI) Evaluating Responses to Natural Disasters in the Caribbean: Methods and Results. Ocean warming associated with climate change has increased the intensity of tropical storms worldwide, impacting human social and cultural adaptations to their destructive impacts. It is important to understand these impacts in terms of human adaptations which influence their relative vulnerability and resilience to natural disasters. This session examines aspects of methods used to assess and communicate these impacts in Cuba, Puerto Rico, the USVI, and the Bahamas, as well as their utility in achieving adequate assessments. Recommendations are made concerning the utility of different methodologies. tarseara@gmail.com (TH-11)

SHARP, Lesley (Barnard Coll, Columbia U), GREEN, Linda B. (U Arizona), and CHEN, Nancy N. (UCSC) Politically-Engaged (Public) Medical Anthropology: From Theory to Praxis. How do politically-engaged medical anthropologists transform theory into praxis? What are the consequences of reaching broader publics? This roundtable assemble two generations of scholars; the first half consists of project overviews and cross-generational dialogue; the second involves audience engagement. Topics include: sacred sites, caretaking, and environmental toxicity in Mexican megaprojects (Contreras); new formations of eating resilient brain foods in China (Chen); embodied
SHATTUCK, Daniel (PIRE) and STURM, Robert (NM Community AIDS Partnership) Innovating Anthropology though Community-Based Implementation Research to Improve the Health and Wellbeing of Sexual and Gender Minority People in New Mexico. Sexual and gender minority (SGM) people face health inequities spanning from increased risk of depression and suicide to poor physical health outcomes. This panel explores innovations in ways that anthropologists and community health professionals can collaboratively approach researching and intervening to ameliorate these health inequities in the rural, ethnically-diverse state of New Mexico. Of special interest is our focus on applying implementation science methods to shift the organizational, system, and broader sociocultural state of New Mexico. (T-121)

SHRESTHA, Milan (ASU) and NAZAREA, Virginia (UGA) Bridging Displacement through Sanctuaries on Land and Water: A Session in Honor of Robert E. Rhoades, Parts I-II. From the adaptive capacity of indigenous cultures and global diasporas, to the diversity of mountain agriculture, to the resilience of farming and gardening in the South, Robert Rhoades’ work has touched on multiple means for transgressive work and sanctuary-making. In this session, we address the question: How do people sanctuary in motion, and under vulnerable conditions of modernity? The participants will examine sanctuaries as personal and private or social and collective responses to global displacement, habitat fragmentation, biodiversity loss, and climate change. Applied Anthropology has been Bob’s passion and life’s work. The 2020 theme captures the subtext of his contribution. milan.shrestha@asu.edu (W-06, W-36)

SILVER, Lauren (Rutgers U-Camden) Radical Methodologies: Feminist Ethnography for Healing and Transformation. As a collective of feminist ethnographers, we express diverse identities, place-based commitments, and citizenship orientations including different intersections across disability, racialization, and queerness. In this panel, we explore methodological innovations around: 1) attending to affect, memory, and the body 2) engaging in intersectional reflexivity 3) and grappling with the tension between political advocacy and theory. Radical methodology allows us to engage critically and intimately with disability & special education in the U.S., postcolonial schooling with indigenous girls in India, and young Black families and reproductive (in) justice in a U.S. child welfare system. ljsilver@camden.rutgers.edu (S-72)

SOARES, Pedro P.M.A. (UFPA, Brazil) and BARRIOS, Roberto E. (SIUC) Politics and Nature: Issues on Risk and Disaster in the Global South, Parts I-II. In the Global South, disasters are associated with colonization, dependent economies, and uneven growth. Therefore, Global South exists as a set of relations of power rather than a fixed place in the globe. This panel fosters discussions on the articulation of production of inequalities, politics of nature, and the struggles between policy (ir)rationailities and local epistemologies regarding risk and disaster creation. Its foci include specific events and cyclic disasters; consequences of colonization; analysis biased by class, race, gender, and generation; effects of development and urbanization; memory, ideology, symbolism, and the political implications of anthropological work on Risk and Disaster developed at NGOs, State, and Universities. pedropaulo.soares@yahoo.com.br (F-11, F-41)

STIGLICH, Janice (Rutgers U-Camden) Children’s Participation as a Vehicle to Redefine Cultural Citizenship. Children and youth in Southern contexts reshape ‘normative’ structures dictating cultural value through participation. In this panel, we center children’s relational and collective modes of participation, rather than conceptualizing their actions alongside Northern metrics which scrutinize their individual agency. School children in Tamil Nadu, India negotiate their social-circles by consuming certain smartphone apps, despite adult moral concerns of isolation. Organized working girls in Peru effort to strengthen their rights consciousness; making space for nonmormon children. Colombian youth perform citizenship as a part of their commitment to the post-conflict context. In these papers, children’s participation can be a lens through which to discuss citizenship. (F-63)

STOFFLE, Richard W. (U Arizona) We Never Forgot: Internally Relocated People Re/connect with Homelands, Parts I-II. Traditional people have been internally relocated within their own nation states causing cultural damage and challenges to their persistence. Relocation often occurs because they occupied homelands containing natural resources desired by others. National parks and protected areas often remove traditional people who are perceived as threats to nature. Cultural impacts occur whether or not the relocations are near or far away. This session is about applied anthropologists studying relocation impacts and suggesting ways to facilitate homeland re/connections. Given mutual changes in the homeland and the relocated peoples both traditional connections and new modes of interaction are documented, thus use of the concept re/ connections. rstoffle@email.arizona.edu (F-95, F-125)

STOREY, Angela (U Louisville) and SHEEHAN, Megan (CSBSIU) At the Frayed Edges of Policy: Practices and Engagements as People and Policies Meet. This panel interrogates sites in which individuals, organizations, and communities engage with the nebulous margins of state and local policies. Papers ethnographically explore spaces in which interactions seem guided or shaped by laws, regulations, or policy-based rhetoric and norms, but in which a clear line between policy-making and human impact is harder to trace. As the frontiers of policy continuously expand (Shore & Wright 2005), the implications of policy and its enforcement often become the backdrop of everyday life. This panel asks: how and where do the frayed edges of policy come to be visible, actionable, and contested? (S-05)

STUMPF-CAROME, Jeanne Marie (Kent State U Geauga) Cultural Citizenship: Crossings, Crosscurrents, and Countercurrents of Human Movement. Cultural citizenship in contexts of migration, tourism, territorial expansion, religious practices and land use is considered in this session. These fluid situations are explored in present-day settings and wide-ranging locations and field settings—Ecuador, France, Germany, Peru, Sabah, Malaysia, and South Dakota. These patterns and articulations of the flow of human movement are examined in terms of the ensuing conundrums of human, indigenous, cultural, civil and customary rights, beliefs, and identity formation. Traditional and bygone “tropes” of blood, land tenure, rule-of-law, bible, and citizenship are explored within new-found, transitional, and interstitial paths in global networks whose margins expand and contract. jstumpfc@kent.edu (F-122)

SULLIVAN, Kate (CSULA) and BUROW, Paul (Yale U) Natural Resources in the Age of Citizenship. This panel examines citizenship through the lens of natural resource control, access, management, and use. Natural resources in settler society modernity serve as a significant hinge between claims to sovereignty and bodies politic, for First Peoples and for Settler states at the federal, state, and municipal levels. The very conceptual framework used to cordon and contain resources as “natural,” and thus outside, and yet always coralled by socio-political institutions, suggests that this hinge is contingent and must be maintained through on-going practices. Our panel explores vibrant, contesting voices and their practices as they make and remake this hinge. kate.sullivan@aim.com (F-96)

SULLIVAN, Laura (SARSF) and BAKER, Nancy (NDI New Mexico) Building a Culture of Philanthropy. To be successful, organizations and institutions of higher education must rely on a loyal group of supporters who believe in the mission and are willing to invest in the impact on its constituents. A healthy culture of philanthropy involves a diverse group of stakeholders and a commitment to a shared mission. Through this commitment, change can happen from the inside out and philanthropy can drive social change. In diverse societies and organizations, shared responsibility can have dramatic impact. Join this discussion to examine ways you can play a role and contribute to a culture of philanthropy in your institution. ljsullivan@sarsf.org (F-74)
SURREY, David (Saint Peter’s U) Resisting 2019 Immigration Terrors: A Culture of Survival. In a time of political, spiritual and material crisis, it is often youth who lead movements for change, whether it be in high schools, on college campuses, or within intergenerational partnerships in communities. This panel will focus on youth organizing in higher education focused on three overlapping domains: climate change, xenophobia and immigration. The panelists are activists, who are full-time students and often hold close to full-time jobs. Their roots are Brown, Black, Muslim, Asian and European forced into a thriving cross-cultural community united by what was supposed to be the American Dream of Justice for All. d.surrey@saintpeters.edu (W-123)

SYVERTSEN, Jennifer and MCMULLIN, Juliet (UCR) Pretty Words: Critical Perspectives on Community-Engaged Research. Although funding agencies are increasingly requiring researchers to involve communities and make their work more broadly accessible, many academics are not sufficiently trained in how to do this. This roundtable will open up a critical dialogue about what we call “pretty words,” or concepts like “community-engaged research” and “diversity” that get grants, but risk becoming hollow and even alienating without genuine, sustained collaboration with communities. Drawing on our work as part of a newly-created Center for Health Disparities Research, our goal is to discuss ways to collectively shift from research “on” communities to “with” communities to make a greater impact on the world. jsyvert@ucr.edu (F-68)

SZKUPINSKI QUIROGA, Seline and O’CONNOR, Brendan (ASU) Cultural Citizenship and Academic Identity in the College Assistance Migrant Program (CAMP). This panel will engage students, staff, and researchers from the College Assistance Migrant Programs (CAMP) at Arizona State University and New Mexico State University in exploring enactments of cultural citizenship among Mexican-origin migrant students in CAMP. CAMP is a federally funded program that supports students from migrant and seasonal farmworker backgrounds during their first year of college. Participants will discuss CAMP students’ and staff’s efforts to foster a sense of belonging and develop academic identities in higher education, contrasting experiences at predominantly White, though ethnically diverse (ASU) and Hispanic-serving (NMSU) institutions and sharing implications for migrant-focused research, teaching, and advocacy. seline@asu.edu (F-15)

TAMIR, Orit and JENKINS, Kathy (NMHU) Unions in Academia: Cultural Citizenship or Response to Volatility in Academe. American colleges and universities increasingly pose threat to tenure and operate like corporations: they lower the number of tenure/track faculty positions and increase the numbers of contingent and per course faculty who work for low pay and minimal/no benefits. In response, many faculty members have organized and voted to join labor unions in order to address tenure, working conditions, benefits, and so on. How can a labor union help resolve the problems facing faculty, staff, and students in the 21st Century American academy? otamir@nmhu.edu (F-105)

TAYLOR, Sarah R. (CSUDH) Heritage and Change in Highland Guatemala: Reports from the 2019 CSUDH Ethnographic Field School. The indigenous communities of Guatemala’s Western Highlands have experienced long and unique histories but their culture and heritage still flourish despite global change. These histories contextualize the ways that these communities identify with their cultural traditions and identities. Papers in this session explore critical issues affecting contemporary Guatemalan society. Topics addressed include gendered division of labor, economies of weaving, traditional ecological knowledge, and the course of childhood in communities around the Lake Atitlán region. The papers in this session are based on ethnographic field research conducted during the 2019 season of the CSU Dominguez Hills Ethnographic Field School field school. sartaylor@csudh.edu (TH-09)

TRAPP, Micah and BRONDO, Keri (U Memphis) Practicing Anthropology in Politically Polarized Times: Insights from COPAI Members. This roundtable discussion features discussion on the role and nature of practicing and applied anthropology in an environment of increasing political polarization. Invited roundtable participants will broadly consider how contentious political discourse on notions of belonging and citizenship has impacted domestic and applied research and practice. Participants will discuss how the scaling back of rights, protections, and services for non-dominant groups has impacted anthropological practice and offer initial insights on challenges and opportunities encountered in the classroom, working with community organizations, government agencies, and the public. Open discussion on the changing role and future of anthropological practice will follow. mmtrapp@memphis.edu (TH-37)

ULLMAN, Char (UTEP) Resisting Hegemonic Practices and Finding Ways to Create Belonging: Cultural Citizenship in Borderlands Classrooms and Schools. Minoritized students must engage in cultural and linguistic practices that allow them to claim spaces for belonging in U.S. schools while simultaneously resisting the practices that seek to exclude them. This contradiction is at the heart of Rosaldo’s concept of cultural citizenship (1994), and these papers consider how cultural citizenship is enacted in elementary, high school, and university classrooms among Latinx, Black, transfrontier, differently-abled, and queer students. We understand cultural citizenship to include language choice and language use, and educational access, all of which contribute deeply to developing a sense of belonging and to the ability to resist hegemony. cullman@utep.edu (W-44)

USCHER, Nancy J. (UNLV) Achieving Institutional Wisdom through Cultural Transformation: An Exploration of Strategies for Success. The broad range of perspectives presented on this panel will illuminate pathways by which an institution can struggle against barriers that prevent institutional growth and evolution. While there is often fear of change within institutional culture, the introduction of strategies to help negotiate the complexities of higher education issues can also instill a sense of hopefulness and optimism among faculty and staff who are exposed to new and open mindsets. This fresh outlook encourages positive momentum, which can lead to creative frameworks for finding solutions to challenges. These experiences, in turn, provide the seeds for cultural transformation and institutional wisdom. (F-134)

VESPERI, Maria (New Coll FL) and SOKOLOVSKY, Jay (USF St. Petersburg) Negotiating Citizenship and Diversity over the Life Course: Research and Careers Informed by Anthropological Approaches. Aging populations will contribute to 21st century turbulence in increasingly challenging ways that call for advocacy, policy shifts, and attention to redressing deep structural inequalities amid increasing diversity. This interactive event is led by anthropologists with experience in medical environments, participatory action research, publishing, Native American Health, disability studies, and multidisciplinary approaches to teaching about aging. Graduate students and colleagues who want to explore careers, research, and publishing opportunities in aging and the life course are invited to share informal but focused discussion on how anthropological perspectives can contribute to aging-related fields. Light buffet breakfast, suggested donation $10. mvesperi@earthlink.net (S-20)

VILLARREAL, Aimee (Our Lady of the Lake U) Reverse Anthropologies: Making Space for Hometown Ethnography and Archeology. This roundtable calls for a decolonial practice of hometown ethnography and archeology grounded in reverse anthropologies or what we term anthropocolu西亚 – a curative and restorative practice of coalitional knowledge production that interrogates the home/field divide and elevates applied research and activism within our tribes and homelaces. Homework refuses the coloniality of the faraway field while confronting the multiple tensions, asymmetric powers, and ideologies that adhere to home and homelaces. Native scholars invite dialog and critical introspection on what it means to do hometown or homegrown ethnography or archeology within a discipline that valorizes research abroad and forces us away. amvillarreal@ollusa.edu (W-45)

WALL, Alaka (Field Museum) and TOPASH-CALDWELL, Blaire (Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians) Intersections between Indigenous Activism and Museums. By recognizing decades of cultural theft and the Anthropologists and social scientists often find themselves at the forefront of general education programs on campus, attributed in part to a commitment to wide-reaching and holistic approaches. This two-part session includes analyses of general education concepts such as “diversity,” case studies of general education from the US and around the world, opportunities for faculty development, unique general education student populations, assessment strategies, and philosophical/pedagogical challenges. jrwies@bsu.edu (TH-14, TH-44)

WILLGING, Cathleen (PIRE) Trust, Trauma, and Turnover: Advancing Health Equity for American Indian Elders. Understanding and addressing the significant health and healthcare inequities experienced by American Indian elders is an urgent public health need. This panel draws on mixed-methods research to explore the multifaceted sources of these inequities, from the historically traumatic (e.g., boarding schools) to the mundane (e.g., wait times, paperwork), as well as the comprehensive, multilevel health interventions and policy reforms needed to address them. Together, papers advance a call for both pragmatic improvements to elders’ experiences of the healthcare system and large-scale structural changes to fulfill the United States government’s unmet responsibilities to American Indian people. cwilging@pire.org (T-64)

WILLLOW, Anna (OH State U) ExtrACTION and Time, Part I: Temporalities. This two-part session explores the diverse and dynamic intersections of extraction and time. In recent years, anthropologists have investigated the causes and consequences of extreme extraction, pervasive pollution, and interrelated instances of sociocological devastation. Less well understood, however, are the relationships among extraction, impacts, and time. Papers in these sessions consider 1) how diverse temporalities can be used to justify or challenge environmental destruction, 2) how attention to time can help us make anthropological sense of life in a rapidly changing world, and 3) what ethnographic narratives can reveal about extractive processes and local fights for land and life. willow.1@osu.edu (TH-06)

WILLLOW, Anna (OH State U) ExtrACTION and Time, Part II: Narratives. This two-part session explores the diverse and dynamic intersections of extraction and time. In recent years, anthropologists have investigated the causes and consequences of extreme extraction, pervasive pollution, and interrelated instances of sociocological devastation. Less well understood, however, are the relationships among extraction, impacts, and time. Papers in these sessions consider 1) how diverse temporalities can be used to justify or challenge environmental destruction, 2) how attention to time can help us make anthropological sense of life in a rapidly changing world, and 3) what ethnographic narratives can reveal about extractive processes and local fights for land and life. willow.1@osu.edu (TH-36)

WINTHROP, Robert (UMD) Occasional Victories: Are There Successful Interventions over Energy and Resources? While anthropologists often document the disproportionate burdens that extractive technologies place on poorer and less powerful communities, they also participate in successful interventions that lead to more equitable outcomes? This roundtable asks what constitutes “success” in regulated energy and natural resource projects, drawing from scholarly research, practice, and advocacy. Each panelist will briefly describe a professional experience in the energy and resource sector. Panelists and audience are asked to consider: By what criteria should we determine success? Can we identify any common factors contributing to success? Do these examples suggest useful directions for research, practice, or advocacy? rwinthro@umd.edu (F-66)

WOIAK, Joanne (U Washington) SDS Roundtable on Disability Anthropology as Activism and Academics. Disability studies and applied anthropology each arose from collective action that includes political activism and academic research and teaching. This roundtable gathers together Board members of the Society for Disability Studies who engage in disability anthropology with a commitment to activism. We particularly welcome the participation of people working on disability and aging, education, health, development, immigration, and environment. How does disability anthropology encompass the roles of... activist-scholars, scholar-activists, artists, and community organizers? How can our fields work to generate understanding and sustainable growth out of the tensions engendered by the current perception of an academia/activism divide?

WOLF-MEYER, Matthew (Binghamton U) and DOUCET-BATTLE, James (UCSC) What Kind of Substance Is This? Medical practice is changing how Americans think about bodily substances and their relations to them. Through diverse corporeal lenses such as blood, mucus, DNA, skin, brains, and more, biomedical technologies offer new ways of reckoning kinship and ascribing risk. Drawing on anthropological approaches to kinship that see substance as a mediating factor in making kin and relations between kin, how might we think about medical and medicalized substances and their impacts on social forms in the U.S. in the early 21st century? How is biomedicine reworking kinship, and how is this reworking being challenged, by who and with what effects?

YAMADA, Toru (Meiji U) Turbulent Nationalism(s) and Alienation: Patterns and Considerations. The papers in this panel focus on alienation from policy processes. We indicate groups that are detached from policy formations either because of exclusion by power holders, or because of disregard of the processes. These case studies across the ethnological spectrum—small-scale markets in Cambodia, Japanese heritage landscapes, media analysis in the context of Trump’s obstruction, and Chinese musical galas on TV—tell us about divisiveness that often centers on affect over processual realities. We ask how anthropological research can address this separation, especially in the context of rising nationalism. (F-93)

ZHANG, Shaozeng (OR State U) Digital Technologies and Cultural Citizenship. The “ubiquitous” use of digital technologies both as social infrastructure and as personal devices has become a transformative cultural force at local, national and transnational scales nowadays. This session explores a wide array of questions, from the digital ways of thinking since the beginning of industrial labor division, to the transformation of citizens and nation into cyborgs, and from marginalized communities’ access to basic technologies as educational infrastructure, to the impacts of more recent technologies on citizen status and rights. This session examines cultural citizenship as a social-technological process, challenges the concept of citizenship, and contributes to current policy debates. shaozeng.zhang@oregonstate.edu (F-124)

ADAMS, Tanisha (WVU) Undergraduate Anthropology as White Academic Space?: Perceptions and Experiences of Minority Anthropology Students at West Virginia University. In 2011 the AAA Commission on Race and Racism in Anthropology (CRRA) conducted a survey to examine the experiences and status of minorities within the field of anthropology. The survey focused on the graduate students and those in academic positions. The results of this survey demonstrate racial and ethnic marginalization within the field of anthropology. What the CRRA study does not include is the undergraduate experience. This ethnographic study explores the experiences and status of undergraduate students in anthropology (and related fields) at West Virginia University using an interview script adapted from the CRRA survey questions. AMMONS, Samantha (UN-Omaha) Oh, the Stories We Share!: What Can the Little Free Library Database Tell Us about the Limits of Neighborhood Engagement in Omaha, NE? Front yard objects like flags and gnomes display social identities present within households (like ethnicity, social class, and religious affiliation), and signal a willingness to engage. Little Free Libraries (LFL), which allow for book exchange, take this exchange between viewer and resident into the material realm. In the LFL database, stewards may attach images or tell library creation stories, but some do not. Why might some stewards take these additional steps? How does variation occur by location, household income, and library features? What can LFL stories and images, tell us about cultural citizenship and neighborhood engagement? sammons@s.unomaha.edu (TH-131)

(UN-Omaha), MCGUIRE, Joseph (U Alabama), HUGHES, Craig G., HUYNH, Bao Tram Ngoe, BROWN, Angela, ALEXANDER, Alana, THOMPSON, Brenna, GRAY, Elyssa, POWELL, Mary Ann, and IRWIN, Jay (UN-Omaha) Inside Out: Space and Hierarchy in an Interprofessional Student-Run Free Clinic. Interprofessional education (IPE) has changed health professions’ school curricula, as understanding, respecting, and utilizing health professions expertise is essential in providing the best patient care in the twenty-first century. We report on an ethnographic project evaluating interprofessional learning and interaction among medical and pharmacy students in a student-run free clinic. Analysis of tone and content reveal that interprofessional collaborative interaction manifests differently according to the formality of the space. Formal spaces conjure and reify hierarchically professional boundaries. While in informal transitory spaces, professional role expectations are muted, and a different and useful form of collaboration emerges (but may be unacknowledged). tbarone@unomaha.edu (TH-131)

BEHLING, Emma (NAU) GIS Analysis of Ancestral Puebloan Agricultural Strategies and Landscape Use on Black Mesa. This poster presentation sets out a proposed research project using ArcGIS spatial analytical software to develop a predictive model of Ancestral Puebloan agricultural strategies on Black Mesa in northeastern Arizona. The project will develop a new spatial database drawing on the Black Mesa Archaeological Project and will also develop data from contemporary consultation. The project aims to identify potential and probable agricultural sites with respect to known Ancestral Puebloan settlements on Black Mesa. The resulting predictive model will position future researchers to more fully understand landscape use, patterns, and interactions between settlement and farming sites. ehh349@nau.edu (TH-131)

BERNARD, Miranda and GERBER, Leah (ASU) Community Engagement for Impactful Conservation in Caribbean Marine Protected Areas. Community engagement is often cited as an important tool in conservation interventions, as it promotes education and inclusion of various knowledge sources. Engagement encompasses an array of strategies and people involved. However, we do not know the impacts of different types and attributes of engagement on socio-ecological systems. Using Caribbean marine protected areas (MPAs) as a lens, we conducted content analysis on narratives in peer-reviewed literature across dimensions of engagement and associated impacts on environmental and community wellbeing. The paucity of scholarship regarding community engagement in MPAs highlights the need for more research to better inform conservation planning and policy. mlbern1@asu.edu (TH-131)

BONAGURIO, Christine (TX State U) Experiencing Meals on Wheels Meal Delivery Program. Meals on Wheels Central Texas (MOWCTX) strives to provide a system of support for its senior clients in order to extend their independence and health as they age. Currently, funding for MOWCTX is in jeopardy; for-profit companies seek to acquire federal funds MOWCTX relies on. To preserve their funding, I assisted MOWCTX in gaining an understanding of how their model offers more than nutritional support. I conducted observations during deliveries and 20 interviews with current clients. My research found that there are additional practical benefits, including the ready-to-eat meals and face-to-face interactions with volunteers, that are unique to MOWCTX. cmb243@txstate.edu (TH-131)

BOSTICK, Gaia (U Puget Sound) An Ethnographic Assessment of Restoration Efforts on the Great Barrier Reef. The Great Barrier Reef and reefs globally are rapidly changing and being threatened by different anthropogenic and natural causes. North Queensland communities are on the doorstep of the Great Barrier Reef and its economy and people’s livelihood depend on it. This project utilizes various methods to aid restoration on the GBR and help preserve it. I used ethnographic methods, qualitative/quantitative data, and semi-structured or informal interviews, to collect my results for the project’s question. The conclusions of this project point to the value and complexities of community engagement, and the enduring importance of education and awareness in the restoration process. (TH-131)

BROPHY, Kendall, WIES, Jennifer, PLACE, Jean Marie, and PLACEK, Caitlyn (Ball State U) Perinatal Opioid Users’ Perceptions of Healthcare Providers and Their Influence on Treatment. Perinatal opioid use has been a rising issue in recent years, yet women’s interactions with healthcare providers have not received an in-depth investigation through a social-ecological lens. The current study investigates perceptions of healthcare providers’ support in Delaware County, Indiana. In-depth interviews were conducted with women attending a maternal treatment program for substance abuse. Interviews were coded iteratively using the social-ecological model to generate themes. Results indicated that women perceive healthcare providers as having significant influence on treatment decisions and staying clean. We conclude with a discussion on the effectiveness of interacting with perinatal users and provide suggestions for improvement. kebrophy@bsu.edu (TH-131)

BUCHEMAN, Talia, DILLON, Daniel D., and DONALDSON, Susanna (WVU), MORRIS, Ann M. (WVU Cancer Inst) Cultural Knowledge and Perception of Cancer and Cancer Healthcare among a College-going/College-educated Population in North Central West Virginia. West Virginians experience suboptimal health outcomes, including above average cancer rates. Previous studies suggest that cultural factors may explain this phenomenon in low-income, undereducated populations. Few studies, however, have examined cancer health literacy among college-going/college-educated populations in West Virginia or the Appalachian region. This study builds upon previous research to evaluate pile sorting as a methodology for studying the cultural knowledge and perceptions of cancer and cancer healthcare among both college-going/college-educated and rural, low-income populations in north central West Virginia. BUERERMANN, Claudia (Whitman Coll) Mountaineering on Sacred Spaces in the Pacific Northwest: Finding Mutual Meaning, Use, and Value. This poster presents research on the overlap of popular mountaineering routes throughout the Pacific Northwest and areas deemed sacred by indigenous peoples of the region. Theorized is the under-appreciation by outdoor-recreation communities of the value attached to these sacred spaces. Through analytic methods such as GIS, the project has resulted in maps that combine sacred spaces and popular recreation areas to outdoor enthusiasts. Grounded in exploring relationships between thinking of landscapes as recreational playgrounds or as sacred spaces, my project aims to develop ways of mutual understanding across groups in how meaning, use, and value are attached to outdoor spaces. cbueermann@gmail.com (TH-131)

BYTH, Janice, GOEBEL, James, HAWVERMALE, Erica, GIAMARQUO, Gi, SCOTT, Lauren, ALVARADO, Angela, and HENRY, Doug (UNT) Pick Two: School, Work, Social Life, Sleep: An Exploration of Undergraduates' Sleep Habits. Due to the need to balance academic, work, and social life, undergraduate students' sleep cycles can change dramatically during college. This research looks at how undergraduate students at the University of North Texas conceptualize ideal sleep, and how they perceive their own sleep habits matching up to that ideal. Participants discussed how they used assistive aids for falling asleep (melatonin, music, etc.) and staying awake (caffeine, Adderall, etc.) in order to navigate conflicting demands. This research is positioned to inform university administration how students sleep, how they learn sleep habits, and how the academic system impacts sleep hygiene. janicebyth@my.unt.edu (TH-131)

CAPEL, Tara, REMIS, Melissa, and LINDSHIELD, Stacy (Purdue U) Ethnoprimatology: Preliminary Results of an Applied Approach to Highway Construction in Costa Rica. This project analyzes how primates, including humans, use the forests of Refugio de Gandoca-Manzanillo, Jari Mora Sandoval, Costa Rica and what perceptions local people have about forest resources. Data was collected preceding highway construction. This roadway will improve travel, communication, and access to tourism for local communities, but also dissect the forest. Using transect data and semi-structured interviews, as well as working in tandem with local environmental organizations, will allow the project to develop a small baseline dataset permitting researchers to later assess how the forest, wildlife, and humans are positively and negatively impacted by construction. tcapel@purdue.edu (TH-131)

CARRILLO, Mari and ALLISON, Kerensa (Lewis-Clark State Coll) Medical Pluralism: Shifts in Traditional Knowledge and Practice among Sobadores. Western medical systems often fail to recognize and treat culture-bound symptoms within Latino communities; therefore, an extensive network of traditional healers such as sobadores (musculoskeletal healers) persist within these communities to address the needs of cultural healing (Quandt et al 2017). This ethnographic, descriptive research will attempt to elucidate the healing framework and practice of sobadas, from the perspective of sobadores themselves, through a qualitative, phenomenological approach. It may also explain the shifts that sobadores and their practice are undergoing in relation to changing demands for integrative medicine and pluralistic medical systems in the U.S. msccarrillo@lcmail.lcsc.edu (TH-131)

CHOWDHURY, Nusaila (SMU) Idioms of Distress among Muslim Refugees: An Ethnographically-Informed Literature Review. Existing anthropological work suggests that health practitioners typically misunderstand what Muslim refugees are trying to communicate about mental health concerns and needs. This poster presents data from two sources. First, I review the anthropological literature about “idioms of distress,” or “adaptive responses or attempts to resolve a pathological situation in a culturally meaningful way,” (Nichter, 1981) among Muslim Iraqi, Afghan, and Syrian refugees. I also reflect on my own preliminary experiences of working with Muslim refugees in Cleveland, Ohio over five years, including six months of data collection during a project surrounding refugee needs regarding mental health care and treatment. nschowdhury@smu.edu (TH-131)

COHN, Maxx (U Puget Sound) Masculinity through a Lens of Indoor Recreational Rock Climbing. I am conducting ethnographic research surrounding expressions of masculinity amongst rock climbers. Look specifically at how masculine expression intersects with the physical, psycho-social and emotional avenues of safety. COLLIVER, Amelia (U Puget Sound) Productivity, Competition, and Empowerment?: The Experience of Pondicherry Fishermen in the Context of Neoliberal Development. This study examines the impacts of neoliberal reforms on women in Tamil Nadu fishing villages. Neoliberalism is a political economic ideology that determines the viability of both individuals and governments based on economic productivity. Using ethnographic methods, I conducted a series of interviews with women in the village of Veerampattinam as well as with policy officials. The study finds that neoliberalism has caused shifts in government behavior, individual thought and action, and connection of women to traditional livelihood. However, women believe in collective responsibility, community unity, and empowerment beyond economic empowerment, which pose contradictions to neoliberal theory. acolliver@pugetsound.edu (TH-131)

CONNELLY, Alicia and MURPHY, Arthur (UNCG). JONES, Eric C. (UTH TMC) Social Media and Political Mobilization: The ABC Day Care Fire in Hermosillo, Mexico. On June 5, 2009, a fire in the ABC daycare center in Hermosillo, Sonora, left 49 children dead and 40 hospitalized. This paper examines the crucial role social media, including Facebook and Twitter, played in initiating and executing political mobilization, organizing events, articulating feelings, placing blame, and discussing strategies to achieve justice. Several identifiable groups have emerged on social media. Through content analysis, this poster identifies the factors that distinguish the groups. These results build on our past social network analysis of how parents of injured vs. deceased parents created new webs of relations after the fire. amconnelly@uncg.edu (TH-131)

COUGHLAN, Michael (U Oregon), ABRAMS, Jesse (UGA), CRANDEL, Mindy (OR State U), and GAYER, Nicole (U Maine) Youth Aspirations amid Economic and Demographic Transition in Coos County, Oregon. We examined sociodemographic factors influencing perceptions and life course plans (aspirations) of public high school students in Coos County, Oregon. Rural communities in forested regions across the US are in the midst of a transformation driven by a complex mixture of economic, policy, and demographic dynamics. While some rural communities have flourished through these transitions, others have stagnated. In order to persist over the long term, forest-based rural communities must produce and reproduce themselves culturally and demographically. The aspirations of rural youth are key to future sociodemographic trajectories but also provide insights into community-level processes of sociocultural reproduction. mcoughla@uoregon.edu (TH-131)

CROWLEY, Sydney (TTU) Singing Discrimination: The Hidden Reality of Gender Inequality in Capeoira Songs. Capeoira is an Afro-Brazilian martial art that champions the celebration of diversity and advocates for inclusivity and acceptance. Its history establishes a legacy of resistance against oppression; however, based on my previous research into capeoira, I know that there is lip service paid to gender equality that does not reflect the reality of gender relations. I will use textual analysis of capeoira songs to examine overt and covert forms of gender discrimination and determine if a culture of gender inequality persists in the capeoira community today. DAWSON, Kayla, O'BRIEN, Daniel, and COLLINGS, Margaret (IUP) Local Business Perceptions on Sustainability and Plastic Waste. Many large-scale corporations and organizations, due to their sheer size, are targeted to reduce their plastic waste and increase sustainability efforts. However, this leads to small scale local businesses being overlooked in the effort to create a more sustainable society. Does this mean entrepreneurs at local businesses avoid scrutiny for their sustainability efforts? Is sustainability something that local businesses are concerned about, particularly in rural areas? We draw from interviews with managers, owners, and employees of local businesses in Indiana, Pennsylvania, a small town in rural Northern Appalachia, to explore the shifting attitudes, discourses, and practices surrounding sustainability and plastic waste. dawsonkayla12@gmail.com (TH-131)

DUNCAN, Carly and MORRISON, Penelope (Penn State U) Male Intimate Partner Violence Perpetrator’s Perspectives on Their Mental Health, Help Seeking, and IPV: Men who perpetrate intimate partner violence (IPV) are more likely to have a mental health issue (e.g. PTSD, general anxiety, panic disorder, etc.) than non-violent men. We conducted 34 semi-structured interviews with IPV perpetrators enrolled in a batterer intervention program in order to better understand their psychosocial health needs, including those related to mental health. Our preliminary results suggest participants report complex mental health issues, and low help-seeking behaviors, including a lack of willingness to engage in treatment. This study suggests that violence intervention programs may need to be tailored to meet the mental health needs of IPV perpetrators. (TH-131)

GEBBIA, Erica (Bloomburg U) Conceptualizing Space and Place: Ethnographic Accounts of a Cross-Country Cycling Voyage. This past summer, I completed a cross-country cycling trip with Bike & Build, a non-profit organization. Through the action of transient mobility, my team and I visited eleven states in just seventy-seven days. Through ethnographic research, including surveying and interviewing, I compared the embodied meanings of the various geographical locations we visited through the lens of my teammates. The intent of this research is to reconcile divergent theoretical perspectives pertaining to space and place in anthropological literature and consider how they can operate synergistically. elg77722@huskies.bloomu.edu (TH-131)

GILBERT, Tara (Baylor U) Cultivating Climate Adaptation: Factors Influencing Responses of Texas Farmers to Climate Change. Corn and wheat production are critical for both human consumption and livestock production. Climate change projections indicate reductions in U.S. wheat yields by 19% and corn by 8% by 2100 (USEPA 2015). With 98.5% of Texas agricultural operations run by family farms, understanding how norms, values, and knowledge influence a farmer’s decision-making are critical to determining projections for long-term productivity. This research identifies demographic factors that influence farmers’ understanding of climate change; evaluates farmers’ perceptions of climate risks relative to farming experience and scale of operation; and assesses how farmers’ worldviews could be affecting mitigation measures adopted relative to recent weather patterns. tara_gilbert@baylor.edu (TH-131)

GILLIAM, Maya (Puget Sound) Resurgence and Revitalization: Indigenous Food Sovereignty Initiatives in the Puget Sound Region. Global food sovereignty movements are growing in importance in the 21st Century. In the United States, indigenous communities often use these movements to rebuild connections to their traditional food sources and revitalize the culture surrounding these sources. This movement is especially active in the Puget Sound region, home to twenty coastal Salish tribal nations, many of which are currently engaged in developing and implementing programs to promote their connections to traditional foodways. This research explores some of the ways in which these indigenous communities use foodways to assert tribal sovereignty and reconnect with cultural traditions in the contemporary era. mgilliam@pugetsound.edu (TH-131)

GUSTKE, Abigail (Puget Sound) Forming Community and Identity through Gastronomy: Exploring the Social Meanings Associated with the Production and Consumption of Street Food in America. Food is situated within the intersections of various sociological interactions among people and their environment, thus enabling it to act as a vehicle for human ideas, symbols and social actions of meaning making surrounding identity, class etc. This poster provides an account for these meaning making processes within the relatively underexplored and currently trending cultural and gastronomic arena of street food in the United States. Using a variety of ethnographic methods and qualitative data gathering, this research explores how human interactions with food and food spaces shape communities, production and consumption habits, and notions of authenticity in relation to food. agustke@pugetsound.edu (TH-131)

GUTKIN, Alana (Puget Sound) Ethnographic Assessment of Elderly Immigrants’ Experiences. This study investigates the ways in which elderly immigrants create social networks and use those networks to integrate into US society. Usually when immigration is studied we talk about young able bodied people who are able to create networks and integrate themselves into the host country. Elderly people have a harder time creating social networks and are susceptible to ageism in the US. Therefore, this study investigates the ways in which older people integrate themselves as well as deal with being an older person and an immigrant in the United States. This study uses qualitative data consisting of 15 interviews with elderly migrants. agutkin@pugetsound.edu (TH-131)

HAM, Jessica and GIBSON, Alaina (Emory U) From a Sickness of the Head to a Sickness of the Heart?: Exploring the Nexus of Perceived and Biological Stress in Rural Ghana. This poster explores gendered differences in the potential relationship between perceived and biological stress in Upper West Ghana. We draw upon 22 months of mixed methods fieldwork in two neighboring subsistence villages to explore how perceived stress (colloquially referred to as “worry” and measured with an adapted version of the Hopkins Symptom Checklist) influences biological stress (measured via blood pressure). We hypothesize that we will find a negative relationship between these experiences—that higher levels of worry will negatively correlate with elevated blood pressure measurements and that the least remunerative livelihood (charcoal production) will predict the worst health outcomes.

HENSLEY, Samantha (WVU) Cultural Perceptions of Child and Adolescent Farm Labor: An Appalachian Case-Study. This study examines child and adolescent labor in agriculture and its effects on the perceptions of farm work among members of farm families. Much of the anthropological literature on child and adolescent farm labor in the United States focuses on (immigrant) populations. What is less understood is the perception of white, farm owner/operators. The purpose of this research is to explore cultural perceptions of agricultural work learned through the experience of working on the family farm during childhood. This research explores perceptions through ethnographic interview and examines the cultural distinction between farm labor and farm chores using free-listing and pile-sorting. (TH-131)

HORTON, Emily Y. (UGA) and FORTES CARVALHO-NETA, Raimunda Nonata (U Estadual do Maranhão) Scalar Challenges and Valuing Localized Knowledge in Co-management of Fisheries in a Brazilian Marine Extractive Reserve. Scalar mismatches in fisheries co-management can be caused by the marginalization of Localized Ecological Knowledge (LEK) and result in decreased wellbeing and mismanaged resources. This research examines a seasonal fishing ban in a Brazilian Marine Extractive Reserve (MER) that communities say is temporally mismatched with socioecological dynamics. Employing mixed methods, it asks how the ban period overlaps with the ecological patterns of important species and peak shrimp-harvest months. Findings lend support to communities’ long-standing assessments that the ban is misaligned with fish dynamics and livelihood activities. Valuing LEK can promote scalar alignment and support MER’s sustainable fishery and livelihood objectives. eyhorton@uga.edu (TH-131)

JORDAN, Mandy (UNT) Community Engagement Post-Santa Fe High School Shooting: A Look at the Community’s Alternative Therapy Needs. May 18, 2018, Santa Fe, Texas experienced an unimaginable tragedy when a gunman entered the High School killing 10. After, the City opened the Resiliency Center, a place for free mental health assistance and alternative therapy programming. For the Center to ensure inclusiveness, it was necessary to speak with potential service recipients. I conducted a community survey to understand the needs in terms of programs at the Center. 505 responses were received, with more than half coming from those most impacted: High School students. The Center was able to utilize the data provided to grow the Center’s alternative therapy programming. Mandy.M.Jordan@gmail.com (TH-131)

KANUGULA, Samanvi, YEEM, Julia, MBULLO, Patrick, SINGH, Revika, and YOUNG, Sera (Northwestern U Young Rsh Group) Household Water Insecurity Diminishes Social Capital Gain among Women in Western Kenya. Household water insecurity (WI) has been shown to negatively influence household economic wellbeing. However, its impact on social capital (SC), i.e. the presence of social networks and the ability to build relationships with others, is not well known. Therefore, we investigated the impact of household WI on SC among women in western Kenya using go-along and photo elicitation interviews (n=30). Data, coded and analyzed in Atlas.ti, illustrated that individual and household SC decreased with greater WI. This suggests far-reaching consequences of household WI, such as diminished women’s agency within the household and the larger community. samanvikangula2022@u.northwestern.edu (TH-131)

Haitian im/migrant labor has been exploited in the Dominican Republic for decades. However, recent economic shifts represent new opportunities and vulnerabilities for Haitian im/migrants. This research uses a mixed methods approach to offer contextual understanding of young

Prior literature suggests immigration should be considered a social determinant of health. This was an in-depth qualitative study designed to explore the impact of immigration policy on children’s family life, education, and health. Observations of a mobile health clinic, in-depth interviews with parents, and key-informant interviews were used to explore ongoing changes in immigration policy and how these changes impact children’s health, and overall well-being. Initial results suggest parents are aware of policy changes, emphasize education to their children, and are resourceful to get their children’s needs met. (TH-131)

O’CONNELL, Caela (UNCCH) and BROWNE, Katherine (CO State U) “Where Vulnerability Meets Self-Preservation”: Finding the Energy of Underlying Vulnerability After Disaster. In this poster, we explore vulnerability in an expansive way. Drawing on two years of ethnographic research with survivors from Hurricane Harvey, we present longitudinal data collected from survivors across six counties. Houston captured the national news, but the storm made landfall in Rockport, Texas and produced profound damage in many rural and coastal counties all the way to the state’s eastern border with Louisiana. Our broad-based, inclusive rural, urban, and peri-urban sample has inspired us to reconsider how vulnerability is understood. The absence of sharks could negatively impact every other aspect of their ecosystem. Through surveying, interviewing, and participant observation, this ethnographic research focuses on individuals who are advocates for shark conservation to better understand how education and experience transformed their views on sharks from fear to fascination, and even to activism on behalf of sharks. jro60936@huskies.bloomu.edu (TH-131)

OSBORN, Alan (UN-Omaha) Droughts, Rodents, and Weevils: Ecological Basis for Ritual Burning. Climate change, particularly severe droughts, threatens human food security and health. Human responses in subsistence societies to severe drought can include out-migration, shifts in diet, expansion of social networks, and ritual. In Iron Age settlements in southern Africa, archaeologists have found burned granaries and houses thought to be related to rainmaking ritual(s). These episodes of ritual burning coincide with severe droughts during the Medieval Climatic Anomaly (A.D. 1100-1400). This poster examines ecological relationships between severe drought, rodent/insect infestations, and ritual burning – rituals that may have served to eradicate these threats to human food security and health. OSMAN, Gail (Ben-Gurion U) Claiming Citizenship Rights: The Meaning of Activism among Naqab Bedouin Women CSO-Leaders in Israel. Intersections of racialized and gendered processes have largely prevented Naqab Bedouin women accessing (political, social, civil) citizenship rights in Israel. Examining the life stories of Bedouin women CSO-leaders through semi-structured interviews, I ask, “How do Naqab Bedouin women claim their citizenship rights?” By unpacking intersections of their identity, the study provides knowledge about the activists’ strategies, motivations, challenges, and coping mechanisms as they attempt to rectify a range of injustices against individuals who are advocates for shark conservation to better understand how education and experience transformed their views on sharks from fear to fascination, and even to activism on behalf of sharks. gail.osman@gmail.com (TH-131)

PAIGE, Julienne (MS State U), BENYSHEK, Daniel C. and YOUNG, Sharon M. (UNLV), SELANDER, Jodi (Placenta Benefits LTD), CANTOR, Allison (Monteverde Inst Costa Rica) Who Is Recommending Placenta Consumption?: A Survey of Placentophagia Mothers’ Maternal placentophagy, a mother’s consumption of the placenta or ‘afterbirth’ postpartum, is a rare but increasingly popular practice in postindustrial countries. Research has shown that placentophagia mothers cite a host of purported health benefits associated with the practice. Survey data collected from 189 women who had previously consumed the placenta postpartum revealed that midwives and doulas were the most common recommenders and sources of information for these mothers, followed by birthing classes that expectant mothers attended. Investigating the sources of information and recommendations regarding placentophagy further informs our understanding of the decision to engage in this practice. jmp1089@msstate.edu (TH-131)

PATTERSON, Kayla (CSULB) Adaptive Strategies to Chronic Illness for Latinx Patients in Southern California. The Latinx population is the fastest growing and largest minority group in the United States. The Latinx population is afflicted with the highest rates of preventable chronic illnesses, such as diabetes and heart disease while having the lowest rates of accessible health care and insurance coverage. Chronic illness, such as diabetes, requires unrestricted access to health care services for glucose level monitoring and access to medication and supplies. RADWAN, Chad (VA) Endogamous Marriage among the Druzes: Creating Burdens, Bonds, and Obligations. Marriage practices among Druzes are shaped by a shared belief in reincarnation, lack of proselytization, social obligations, and socioeconomic status. In Lebanon, a lower economic status makes marriage a financial burden given expectations of large weddings and sometimes expensive dowries. Marriage includes a significant number of traditions that reify the Druze community while satisfying compulsory social responsibilities. This study illustrates complex connections among faith, finance, and family and how they inform marriage practices. This study is based on qualitative interviews and ethnographic data collected in 2014 focusing on how marriage shapes particularism and sense of community for Lebanese Druzes. cradwan@mail.usf.edu (TH-131)

RAHME, Madeline (U Denver) More than Music: The Lived Experiences of Communities Developed through Music Festivals. RAMSEY, Alec (Baylor U) Digital Landscapes: Comparative Analysis on Social Media Interaction with Climate Activism. The digital era provides a new point of theorization for understanding communication surrounding climate change, especially as it relates to a trend for post-truth politics. While studies have focused on the beliefs instilled about climate change vis-à-vis social media, few have analyzed the social media discourse and ‘truth’ of climate change through critical theory. This poster utilizes a comparative study of students from different academic backgrounds at a southern university to examine how their social backgrounds filter into the dissemination of information, the conceptualization of responses to climate change, and how media trends affect climate activism. alecramsey23@gmail.com (TH-131)

RANDIMBIARIMANANA, Clara (U Arizona) Language Ideologies in Post-colonial Madagascar. This study focuses on the current language ideologies among youth in Madagascar. It involves remote interviews with Malagasy youths from four regions of Madagascar. By using a sociolinguistic theoretical framework, this study explores their day-to-day practices and how that influence their language ideologies. The findings suggest that the family habitus play important roles in their choice of language, while for others, it is the lack of access to the institutional culture. Most surprising was the finding that attitudes towards the French language in the aftermath of extensive “malagachisation” varied more according to local economic opportunities rather than reflecting a general postcolonial anti-French sentiment. c.randimbiarimanana@gmail.com (TH-131)

RATTRAY, Nick (VA/IUPUI), NATIVIDAD, Diana (VA), and MIECH, Edward (VA/IUPUI) The Importance of Finding Purpose: A Configurational Approach to Understanding Veteran Community Reintegration. This study examines underlying factors that shape community reintegration among a sample of US military veterans. We draw on configurational comparative methods (CCM) to understand how specific “recipes” (i.e., combinations of factors) lead to success or lack of success in reintegration outcomes. These methods use the logic of analytical induction and Boolean procedures to compare individual cases. One factor that emerged during interviews – re-establishing a “sense of purpose” – played a critical role in successful adjustment from military to civilian life. We present individual cases to illustrate how gender differences, deployment experiences, and the early period of transition affect reintegration. nrattray@iupui.edu (TH-131)

RAY, Ian (U Denver, Aurora CC, Red Rocks CC), DONAHUE, John (Hartford CC), ZOVAR, Jennifer (Whatcom CC), and SCARBOROUGH, Isabel (Parkland Coll, U IL Urbana-Champaign) Developing an OER for Introductory Archaeology Courses. As a product of the Society for Anthropology in Community Colleges, we report on the developmental process for an open-source educational resource (OER) for introductory archaeology courses. Although this resource will be written for collegiate-level courses, we intend to make it publicly available and accessible for all interested in archaeology. Specifically, we developed a survey to determine the needs of current instructors, a systematic approach to deploying this survey, and a qualitative analysis of responses. We welcome any feedback or interest in collaborations to further the development of a full complement of OER materials for anthropology. ian.ray@du.edu (TH-131)

RIBEIRO PORTO ARAUJO, Mariana and FARIAS, Carmen Roselaine de Oliveira (OR State U) Redefine the Place of Local Knowledge in Science Education. In this research, we aim to understand the learning developed in a fishing community regarding knowledge of the environment and the strategies and skills involved in the fishing practice, and to construct possible relationships between that knowledge developed in daily life and the school knowledge generally present in science education. The research site was the “Island of God” community in the Metropolitan region of Recife (Pernambuco, Brazil). Ethnography was the primary methodological way of constitution, analysis, and understanding of these relationships, supported by participant observation procedures, field diary records, and interviews. The analyses are derived from Ingold’s ecological anthropology, inspired by Merleau-Ponty’s phenomenology. ribeiron@oregonstate.edu (TH-131)

ROBBERS, Lauren and ROBBINS, Taylor (Purdue U) Learning Client Centered Work Skills through the Space for Practice: A Library Renovation Project. Space for Practice is a live and virtual applied anthropology lab at Purdue University. It is envisioned to be a community of practice facilitating collaboration between a diverse team of anthropology students, faculty, and practitioners. Through the Space, students can pursue individual interests through research and professional practice opportunities. Recent student interest involved learning about how to collaborate and work with clients. This poster focuses on an architectural project conducted with the Director of Purdue Library Facilities. The goal was to collect ethnographic information about what students prefer in a study space to inform design recommendations for a library renovation project. laurrobbers@gmail.com (TH-131)

RODDEN, Emily (W Chester U) Humanitarian Aid on the US/Mexico Border. This ethnographic research investigates the day-to-day work of nonprofits in Tucson, Arizona providing humanitarian aid to migrants crossing into the United States illegally. In response to the humanitarian crisis on the border these non-profits leave provisions on known migrant trails in the Sonoran desert. This research aims to understand the work of nonprofits standing in tension with a neoliberal governmentality, the role these nonprofits play in relation to the broader geo-political arena, and to understand how so-called “voluntourists” learn about, and make meaning of, the complex migration situation on the US-Mexico border. erodden16@gmail.com (TH-131)

SAKLEH, Andrea (MS State U) Perspectives on Shame among Palestinian Women. Palestinian women constantly negotiate the parameters of shame ideologies within the larger framework of their culture and, ultimately, within themselves. This project takes an applied qualitative anthropological approach to understanding the phenomenon of shame in the lives of West Bank Palestinian women. Research was conducted in Ramallah in 2019, using an intergenerational analysis. The author investigated how shame beliefs are enforced and manifested in women’s physical lives. This research is pertinent to an increasingly intersectional and globalized society where aspects of shame have significant social and economic impacts. ams1959@msstate.edu (TH-131)

SANCHEZ CASTILLO, Mariana (U Puget Sound) Weaving Sustainability and Carving Identity: An Exploration of Artisan Livelihood in Oaxaca, Mexico. Weaving and woodcarving are pre-Hispanic traditions that have taught artesanos to care for the gifts that nature can provide. However, amidst a global environmental crisis and rise in socioeconomic barriers to indigenous community development, artesanos have had to find ways to uplift their families from poverty, resulting in the exploitation of primary resources. This ethnographic exploration of folk art production uncovers the ways in which artesanos understand the cultural and environmental sustainability surrounding artisan livelihood in a growing globalized neoliberal market. I focused on analyzing how these artisans view themselves and their role in preserving this way of life. msanchezcastillo@pugetsound.edu (TH-131)

SCHALGE, Susan, ANTON, Alexander, and WHITNEY, Dawn (MNSU-Mankato) “Are you first-gen? So am I.” First-generation college students, an increasingly important demographic at US universities, face unique challenges in learning to navigate life on campus. First-generation status often means students feel isolated, take longer to graduate, and are at higher risk of dropping out. Graduate students in Minnesota State-Mankato’s Anthropology Department performed a text analysis of storytelling events about journeys through college given by and for first-generation students. Our goal was to better understand how local first-generation student experiences compare with those reported in related national research. This analysis seeks to assist in the development of programming relevant to improving local first-generation student outcomes. susan.schalge@mnstate.edu (TH-131)

SELMO, Caiying (CSBSJU) Religious Inclusivity at a Catholic Institution. Religion and religious practice are often overlooked aspects of diversity in university settings. The burgeoning field of research addressing inclusivity in higher education predominantly focuses on other underrepresented demographics. Scholars argue that religious diversity is a vital consideration if universities and colleges want to foster truly inclusive campus climates. Based on semi-structured interviews conducted at a small Catholic liberal arts college, this research seeks to better understand the experiences of undergraduate students from underrepresented religious communities. In this poster, I address student experiences of religion and offer some suggestions for colleges and universities seeking to promote inclusive campus climates. (TH-131)

SHENKMAN, Julia (Northwestern U) Redefining the Borders of Medical Tourism: Navigating Healthcare in an Evolving Local Knowledge System. While medical tourism is historically associated with bureaucratic insurance policies, high costs, and long wait times, recent studies have shown that this definition has gaps. Through fieldwork in El Paso, I sought to understand the process by which people travel for care, exploring domestic and cross-border medical tourism. Given its reliance on experiential factors and lack of geographic bounds, I redefine medical tourism as: individuals travelling outside their local healthcare system for medical care. This study will support work to address local barriers to care, and help inform the evolving medical relationship between El Paso and Juarez. juliashenkman@u.northwestern.edu (TH-131)

SMITH, Chad (UTK) Stigma Surrounding HIV/AIDS in the Appalachian South. This study explores stigma surrounding HIV/AIDS in Southern Appalachia and its effects on treatment and prevention. With increasing sero-prevalence of HIV/AIDS within rural regions of the United States, this study seeks to provide a regionally-focused perspective in an effort to inform effective local means of combating stigma. Interviews with individuals living with HIV/AIDS and health care providers through a holistic care clinic in Southern Appalachia provide insight from where stigma originates and how it forms barriers to HIV/AIDS medication. This study exemplifies the harm of stigma, illustrates the importance of cultural understanding, and indicates that reducing stigma may be crucial to preventing and treating HIV/AIDS. csmit360@vols.utk.edu (TH-131)

STEPHENSON, Moriah Bailey (U Arizona), DOSS, Jennie Lee and HOFSTADTER, Sarah (BARA) Where Are All the Workers?: A Look at the Complexity of Reaching Offshore Oil and Gas Workers in Coastal Louisiana. The Bureau of Applied Research in Anthropology at the University of Arizona has studied impacts of the offshore petroleum industry on Louisiana since the mid-1990s. Since 2016, we have conducted five phases of ethnographic research. While comparing past and present data, researchers observed a gap in our data: we interviewed fewer offshore workers compared to past studies. This poster presentation will ask: What spatio-temporal, methodological, and social factors shaped our difficult connecting with offshore oil and gas workers, and what broader implications does this have for our ongoing research project and for practicing anthropology in complex societies? mbstephenson@email.arizona.edu (TH-131)

TOVAR, Antonio (Farmworker Assoc FL), MAC, Valerie (Emory U), ECONOMOS, Jeannie (Farmworker Assoc FL), FLOCKS, Joan (UFL), and MCCALEY, Linda (Emory U) Rest Or Water: Risks of Farmworkers’ Kidneys. With expected increases in extreme weather, there may be a greater risk of injury from extreme heat in outdoor worker populations. To plan for future adaptation measures, studies are needed that can characterize workers’ physiologic responses to heat in outdoor settings such as agriculture. This poster characterizes occupational heat exposure, key vulnerability factors, and physiologic heat stress response in a sample of fernery workers. Results offered potential explanations of kidney injury on farmworkers laboring in hot and humid conditions, we focused on the risk analysis of hydration levels and heat exertion. Interventions should be tailored to specific sub-populations. atovar@uf.edu (TH-131)

THOMAS, Corinne (Bloomsburg U) The Psychosocial Effects of Chronic Stress on Federal Correctional Officers. Most research in prisons has focused on the effects of imprisonment on the social, psychological, and physical well-being of inmates, however, little research has been conducted on Federal Correctional Officers, despite the fact that they play a key role in maintaining safety and structure in prisons. Officers occupy what is often a stressful position between inmates, co-workers, and the prison administration, while negotiating the stress of their job with the outside world, including friends and family. My ethnographic research addresses how the complex roles and relationships of Correctional Officers contribute to the development of chronic stress, social isolation, and conflict. cn25360@gmail.com (TH-131)

THOMPSON-CAMPICTOR, Carly (NAU) Liminality and Societal Reintegration: How a Suspended State of Being Influences the Path Back to Society After Living with Illness. This poster will consider the ways in which the disability system defines and perpetuates a state of liminality for those living with chronic illness seeking to transition back into society. Transitional barriers exist around societal reintegration; these barriers work to create a suspended state of being, which exacerbates loss of social viability, and creates further challenges in accessing and utilizing appropriate rehabilitation services. Considering the ongoing adaptations those with chronic illness must make while working to transition back to society from states of acute illness may help better illuminate sound pathways to reintegration. c.camipctor@gmail.com (TH-131)

TOME, Lilibeth (CSULB) Growing Food in an Urban Area: Comparative Analysis of Food Deserts. This ethnographic study focuses on gardening, health, and food preferences in the greater Los Angeles area. A large percentage of Los Angeles county residents remain food insecure in areas defined as food deserts. The USDA defines food deserts as places with limited access to affordable or fresh fruits, vegetables, and other healthful foods. This project offers a comparative analysis between two areas classified as food deserts and non-food deserts. Through in-depth interviewing and surveys, I examine cultural factors that contribute to residents’ food preferences and their understanding of relationships between food and health. lilibethome29@gmail.com (TH-131)

This poster illustrates work associated with the National Academy of the Sciences Capacity Building Grant awarded to the Isle de Jean Charles (IdJC) tribe and the Lowlander Center. This grant promoted collaborative research, cross-boundary network building, and knowledge synthesis in the Tribal resettlement process - a process sparked by coastal Tribal land loss. As Tribal community members and a diverse team of researchers, we demonstrate how this grant has supported IdJC Tribal resettlement goals, built knowledge networks, responded to power inequities, emphasized social justice, negotiated Tribal citizen rights, and developed experience-informed guidelines for other communities facing similar environmental, administrative, and sovereignty issues. etooher@unm.edu (TH-131)
TURNER SAGE, Livia (U Puget Sound) The Historical Footprint of the Music Venue. My poster project focuses on the historical context of music venues and their longevity in their communities. WARNER, Faith (Bloomsburg U) Intergenerational and International Trauma in Guatemalan Refugee Populations. This poster reviews data collected on traumatic stress in Guatemalan refugee populations affected by the sociopolitical violence of the 1980s, through the period of encampment in Mexico, to the current period of forced displacement at the U.S. border. Many migrants from previously traumatized communities and families are fleeing renewed violence in Guatemala, only to experience violence and trauma on their journey through Mexico and an uncertain and unwelcoming reception at the U.S. border. I consider the effects of long-term, multigenerational, and repeated trauma on the decision to migrate and the long-term consequences of displacement on well-being and adaptability. fwarner@bloomu.edu (TH-131)

WECHTER, Alex (CSULB) Homeless to a Degree: An Ethnographic Study of Student Homelessness at a California State University Campus. High tuition prices and increases in the cost of living have made going to college a struggle for many students attending. After fees, tuition, supplies and books, some students attending The California State University system, have little to no money for basic needs. This leads to many students suffering from both food and housing insecurity while attending the university. Addressing the issue of student homelessness and food insecurity has become a focus of both educators and the media. Based on interviews with ten students on the California State University Long Beach (CSULB) campus, this preliminary ethnographic study attempts to identify reasons. WESTBROOK, Marisa (UC Denver) Navigating the Risk of Exclusionary Displacement: A Provisional Conceptual Framework of the Drivers of Gentrification. Across the US, researchers have documented the negative impacts of quickly gentrifying cities, yet the experience of being at risk of being priced out of a neighborhood is not fully understood. Denver, Colorado is a strategic case of a large city with rapid growth and rising housing costs that is leading the nation in Latinx displacement due to gentrification. In this poster, I will present my theoretical framing and provisional conceptual frameworks for an in-progress ethnographic dissertation on how low-income households’ choices and actions shape gentrification in their neighborhood, linking these experiences to applied anthropology, migration, and political science. marisa.westbrook@ucdenver.edu (TH-131)

WILLIAMSON, Kenneth and SHEEHAN, Megan (CSBSJU) Food Insecurity on University Campuses: How to Best Address the Problem. Research addressing food security on college campuses has gained traction over the last five years, and an increasing number of studies highlight survey data suggesting that food insecurity is widespread on college campuses (i.e. Dubick 2016). This research explores issues of food insecurity at a small liberal arts college in rural Minnesota. Survey data at the school suggests that one in three students at this school experience food insecurity—data that mirrors national trends. This poster presents complementary qualitative research, addressing institutional trends noted in survey data. The poster also highlights some possible strategies for addressing campus food insecurity. (TH-131)

WINIECKI, Donald, KAPPELMAN, Katherine, and HAY, Bryant (Boise State U) Inductive Qualitative Social Science Research as a Necessary Element of Data Science. Data science (DS) applies exploratory mathematics to very large data sets to aid understanding of intractable phenomena. Sometimes characterized as artificial intelligence, DS can appear to replace human analytic ability. However, data science often requires qualitative researchers. We describe applied ethnographic work undertaken by Anthropology graduate and undergraduate students and a Sociologist to span gaps in data science, and project how products of applied ethnography can be used by data scientists to refine and improve the efficacy of their work. dwinniecki@boisestate.edu, kathleenekappelm@u.boisestate.edu, bryanthay@u.boisestate.edu (TH-131)

SLO Bangers runs the only fixed-site syringe services and overdose education Naloxone distribution program in a geographically large county. This project was implemented to expand services by growing our network of satellite participants. Satellites exchange syringes and furnish Naloxone to those unable to come on-site. We will pay satellites for this work while collecting comparative data and conducting interviews to highlight areas of need and reveal service gaps. Since this population often experiences stigma and trauma associated with provision of health care, one desirable outcome of this project is elevating and empowering participants as active contributors to their community’s health. cwinstea@calpoly.edu (TH-131)

ZAGATA, Alison (Whitman Coll) Vines, Wines, and Wellness: Examining Cultural Perspectives on Healthcare through the Lens of the Walla Walla Wine Industry. Southeastern Washington is home to a vibrant wine industry, one so vibrant that it allowed the region to ride out the 2008 U.S. recession. It is also home to a large community of migrant laborers who reside at the confluence of geographical seclusion and a heightened state of immigration reform. This poster presents the discrete relationships that exist between wine drinkers and wine laborers to the industry. I examine these relationships through the lens of health and wellness with careful attention to the ways in which these distinct groups perceive sickness from a sociocultural standpoint. zagataa@jw whitman.edu (TH-131)

ZRIHLE, Helena (Saint Vincent Coll) Food Insecurity on a College Campus. Food insecurity is the insufficient access to nutritious food and is a recognized concern for students in higher education. It reinterprets the popular legend “La Llorona” to portray Guatemala’s long history of war, a failed justice system, and racism. Fundación Ixcanul, the non-profit arm of Casa de Producción, employs applied anthropological tools to engage audiences in discussing the issues addressed in film (memory, justice, activism, class structure) as well as the use of ethnography to research topics for fiction and non-fiction short and feature films. ale@labetnografico.com (W-100)

As part of the Canadian national dialogue on the co-development of research knowledge with Indigenous peoples, we sought to explore local history with Lac Seul First Nation in Northwestern Ontario. Indigenous youth were invited to create video projects to present historical information about their community. Guided by Elders and following Anishinaabe cultural and storytelling traditions and protocols, Lac Seul and Lakehead University mentors supported the youth in selecting topics, conducting interviews with community members and creating videos to display their learning. This presentation explores the process and pedagogy behind the video projects. mdowsley@lakeheadu.ca (W-70)

STULL, Donald D. (Kansas U) Strangers in Town. Strangers in Town tells how global migration has transformed and enriched Garden City, a micropolitan community on the High Plains of southwest Kansas. Despite great challenges brought on by rapid growth and increased ethnic and linguistic diversity, Garden City has embraced immigration and diversity, creating policies and resources that have helped it grow and thrive. Anthropologists who have studied Garden City since the 1980s, when it was part of the Ford Foundation’s Changing Relations Project, will put the film in anthropological perspective. stull@ku.edu (T-66)

Ten exploration workers of the oil and gas industry talk to camera for the first time in their lives. As lovers of the Earth, experts of its rocks, and as members of the energy industry, they claim a place to talk about their industry and its future. BAYLOR, Elizabeth (Google) The Other Interview: Breaking into UX Research. As an anthropologist, you have well-developed interviewing skills - but do you know how to interview as a job candidate in an applied, industry setting? This workshop will help you master that ‘other’ interview by unpacking industry-specific vocabulary, explaining what interviewers are looking for, and providing concrete strategies and guided practice on 1) how to frame your existing work for a UX audience, and 2) how to quickly design research for a hypothetical scenario. Using role-play and a series of exercises, this workshop will demystify the UX candidate interview so that you can feel equally confident as an interviewee. ebaylor@google.com (TH-18)

CHRISOMALIS, Stephen (Wayne State U) Mentoring Workshop: Building Professional Networks in Anthropological Science. This workshop helps students (undergraduate and graduate) and early-career scholars (postdocs, non-tenure-stream, practicing/professional) build skills to help expand their intellectual networks and find mentorship beyond that provided by their degree program – to make sense out of a sometimes-daunting disciplinary and professional environment. The workshop helps participants talk to broad communities of anthropologists and other social scientists about their work. We will develop practical, actionable strategies for finding like-minded scholars and practitioners within participants’ topics of study, cultivate ‘network thinking’ aimed at academic, non-academic, or hybrid careers, and generate short-form professional narratives for various professional goals. chrisomalis@wayne.edu (F-109)

CLARK, Deja and DELGADO, Hannia (Cool Anthropology, CUNY), BAINES, Kristina (CUNY Gutman), COSTA, Victoria (Cool Anthropology) Making Your Research Make a Difference: Designing a Step-by-Step Strategy to Engage the Public with Social Media. Social media platforms can be both a democratizing force and a dismissive space, simultaneously making research accessible and applicable to a wide audience while also rendering it reductive and dangerously generalized. In this workshop, primarily led by undergraduate interns with Cool Anthropology, participants will develop a step-by-step plan to get their research and applied projects put to a wide audience without compromising rigor or grounded discussion. It is increasingly important that anthropologists are more than researchers and practitioners but are engaged citizens, and this workshop invites participants to engage with their own work with a new perspective. yesbaines@gmail.com (W-18)

GATEWOOD, John B. (Lehigh U) and LOWE, John W. (Cultural Analysis) Cultural Consensus Analysis. This five-hour workshop is an introduction to cultural consensus analysis and how to use it to study the social organization of knowledge. Topics include: the original problem that consensus analysis addresses; the “formal” versus “informal” methods and the kinds of data collections appropriate for each; the need to counter-balance items when using the informal method; using consensus analysis to study sub-cultural variation; how different distributional patterns of knowledge affect the key indicators of consensus; and number of questions needed for reliable assessments of respondent-by-respondent similarity. Discussion of recent developments with CCA and issues in participants’ own research, as time allows. (F-78)

In anthropology’s engagement with the legal system, our “cultural expertise” (Holden 2019) requires further anthropological examination and “field-testing.” In this workshop for practitioners and graduate students, an immigration attorney and a DACA/Dreamer expert examine, along with two anthropological experts on asylum seekers and refugees, the explicit roles anthropological expertise and community partnership can play to advance the legal citizenship of the refugees, asylum seekers and undocumented migrants in the United States. The workshop includes an overview of US court cases and employs role-playing to demonstrate anthropological expert testimony in court and successful collaboration with community and international partners. The workshop is supported by the SFAA Immigration Initiative, and is offered at no cost to participants. rhassoun@svsu.edu (W-109)

IBARRA, Robert, WEISSMANN, Gary, and HOWLAND-DAVIS, Michael (UNM) Context Diversity and Academic Culture: A New Paradigm for Higher Education and Beyond. Current approaches to diversity and inclusion rooted in recruiting and retention activities of the 1960s have achieved some success, but a lingering question remains: why are many disciplines struggling to achieve these goals? Additionally, how can we define what is meant by an inclusive environment? Answers may lie in Multicontext theory. Current academic culture values hyper-individualized approaches to academic work while more collectivist approaches are not as valued. Multicontext theory explains this imbalance, providing a new understanding of diversity and inclusion. This workshop introduces participants to this emerging paradigm and applications in higher education. raiibarra@unm.edu (S-18)

Public participation mapping is becoming an important data collection and public engagement tool for public agencies, community organizations, and others interested in mapping and visualizing the values associated with specific locations on a landscape. This 3-hour interactive workshop walks participants through the maze of options open to mapping practitioners, including considerations related to data collection methods, map design, sampling, outreach, analysis/visualization of results, interpretation of results. The focus of the workshop is on designing mapping projects that will result in data of immediate practical use for community organizations and planners. No previous GIS or mapping experience needed. rebecca.mclain@gmail.com (TH-108)

NOLAN, Riall (Purdue U & Cambridge U) Becoming a Practicing Anthropologist: A Workshop for Students Seeking Non-Academic Careers. This workshop shows students (undergraduate, Master’s and PhD) how to prepare themselves for practice, even within a traditional anthropology program. Six areas will be covered: 1) Practice careers; 2) Practice competencies; 3) Making graduate school count; 4) Career planning; 5) Job-hunting; and 6) Job success. The workshop is three hours long. rwnolan@purdue.edu (F-18)

STINNETT, Ashley (WKU) Applied Visual Ethnography Workshop. This half-day workshop is an introduction to applied visual ethnography. Participants will gain hands-on experience with audio and video equipment, learning the fundamentals of audio-visual research methodologies. The workshop will be tailored to meet varying levels of filmmaking experience, but primarily will be geared towards individuals who are exploring the possibility of incorporating visual media into fieldwork and/or community partnerships. Training will incorporate fieldsite media kits including tripods, DSLR cameras, handheld digital audio recorders, and external microphones. Recommendations will be made for both editing and fieldkit assembly based on affordability, fieldsite conditions, participant skill level, and institution. ashley.stinnett@WKU (W-108)

TAYLOR, Carylanna and OKADA, Jacob (First Encounter Productions) Filmmaking for Anthropologists 101. Would you like to share your work with a broader audience through film? This workshop guides you through the process of making a documentary film and provides tips on achieving professional looking and sounding results on a limited budget. No prior experience is necessary. You will receive a comprehensive packet. Using targeted questions in your packet, we’ll take you step-by-step through the stages of filmmaking: development (refining your idea and budget), pre-production (putting in place your team, equipment, and access to locations and people), production (filming),... post-production (editing, polishing), and outreach/distribution (getting your film to your intended audience). We’ll also weigh the pros and cons of more minimalist and professional approaches to indie filmmaking and touch on ethical considerations specific to anthropological filmmaking. FORMAT: The workshop is six hours. From 8am-12pm, we’ll focus on guiding you through the filmmaking process using slides, demonstrations, and the handout. Some participants may choose to only attend these first four hours. We will break for lunch from 12-12:30. The remaining two hours, 12:30-2:30, will be seminar style to workshop participants’ film ideas and existing projects. (S-19)

Workshop Abstracts

WOLF-MEYER, Matthew (Binghamton U) Society for Medical Anthropology Professionalization Seminar. This workshop is intended for advanced graduate students and recent Ph.D. recipients who are on, or preparing to be on, the academic job market. We will discuss formatting academic CVs, the preparation of job letters, the content of teaching and research statements, the design of syllabuses and assignments, and what to expect during the selection process and on-campus visits. Participants should leave with a clear sense of how to prepare these documents, how search committees operate, and what the outcomes of the job-seeking process are. mwolfmey@binghamton.edu (TH-48)

Human Rights: The Scholar as Activist explores a fundamental dilemma regarding human rights in contemporary society. Namely, how can interested citizens and scholars respond to the widespread abuse of human rights in contemporary society? The essays in this collection address this question and articulate clear directions for action. Using case examples, the authors explore new directions in method and approach, arguing persuasively for a focus on broad policy and more direct means of intervention. Foreword written by President Jimmy Carter.

We celebrate and honor the Sustaining Fellows of the Society for Applied Anthropology. Sustaining Fellows are vital to the Society. They voluntarily pay higher membership dues as an indication of their sincere support to the Society. This additional amount is a contribution that the Society uses to offset the actual costs of Student membership. Our Student members pay a discounted rate for membership yet still receive the benefits of membership. The Society relies on the continuing generosity of the Sustaining Fellows to recruit new Student members at the discounted membership rate.

On behalf of the Board of Directors, I take this opportunity to acknowledge again and applaud those loyal members serving as Sustaining Fellows for 2020.

In continued appreciation,
Sherylyn Briller, Ph.D., SfAA President

Norfolk, Virginia, exemplifies how local communities and polities are linked to multiple social, cultural, and physical ecologies. It is part of the larger Hampton Roads metropolitan area that includes the cities of Virginia Beach and Newport News, VA. The area contains one of the world’s largest natural harbors, where the Elizabeth, Nansemond, James, and other rivers empty into the Chesapeake Bay and then the Atlantic Ocean. As a major coastal watershed, Hampton Roads is highly vulnerable to climate change, which could affect coastal and marine ecosystems as well as the significant and growing tourist economy of Virginia Beach. Shipping and shipyards are major industries, which are subject to the vagaries and fluctuations of global markets, with resulting impacts on local communities. The region is home to a major naval base (Naval Station Norfolk), a major air base (Langley Air Force Base in Hampton), a significant shipyard (Newport News Shipyard), and a railroad terminal for coal to be shipped from the harbor to global markets. Hampton Roads has a deep history, reflected in the major colonial historical sites of Williamsburg and Jamestown and Hampton University, a historically black college/university. Its cultural richness is also manifest in historic African-American communities, a growing migrant Latinx population (including an influx of Puerto Ricans after the hurricanes), and nearby Nottoway and Nansemond indigenous communities. Norfolk and the Hampton Roads area are situated within the Tidewater region of southeastern Virginia and parts of North Carolina, which has been called one of America’s eleven distinct cultural regions.

Norfolk is therefore an ideal setting for anthropologists and other social scientists to engage in broad and multivalent analyses that integrate people, geography, and sociopolitical structures in domestic or international settings. What tools and methods can we offer to link these multiple spheres of action? Are local, global, and geographic factors implicated in economic precarity and health disparities? Has social science adequately addressed health issues relevant to military populations, including family stress, trauma, PTSD, and veterans’ health? If major social and economic nodes draw new populations into an area, how do they interact with groups that have been there for generations? How is immigration associated with community change? In what ways are different populations and economic interests treating the imminent threat of climate change? Are local cultures and languages being preserved in communities reshaped by global forces and trends? How do constructions and discourses of race and ethnicity play out in the interplay of social, cultural, and physical ecologies?

Tuesday, the first day of the meeting, will focus on Hampton Roads and surrounding areas, and will include sessions on such topics as: local responses to climate change; military health; labor migration and the interaction of migrants with longstanding populations; the impact of global markets and politics on local economies; the ramifications of tourism; and how the region’s deep historical roots intertwine with contemporary trends and representations.

Hunter Gatherer Research

Hunter Gatherer Research is an international, multi-disciplinary quarterly publication that covers all aspects of hunter-gatherer studies, whether focusing on the present, past or future.

The journal encompasses genetics, ecology, evolutionary anthropology, archaeology, ethnography, ethnohistory, linguistics, indigenous rights and applied research.

Hunter Gatherer Research is an indispensable resource for anyone with a research or activist interest in hunter-gatherers.

The journal succeeds Before Farming: the archaeology and anthropology of hunter-gatherers, whose archive is maintained by LUP.

Romani Studies

Published on behalf of the Gypsy Lore Society, Romani Studies is an international, interdisciplinary journal publishing modern scholarship in all branches of Romani/Gypsy studies.

The journal features articles on many different communities which, regardless of their origins and self-appellations in various languages, have been referred to in English as Gypsies. These communities include the descendants of migrants from the Indian subcontinent which have been considered as falling into three large subdivisions, Dom, Lom, and Rom.

Romani Studies publishes articles in history, anthropology, ethnography, sociology, linguistics, art, literature, folklore and music, as well as reviews of books and audiovisual materials.
